3293. —— Ship damaged by collision.]—A cargo was shipped by pltf. on defts.' vessel under a charterparty & bill of lading, not excepting the negligence of the master & crew. During the voyage, & through the negligence of the masters & crews of both ships, the vessel came into collision with another, & was so much damaged as to render it necessary to discharge her cargo at a port of refuge, &, after temporary repairs, to complete the voyage in ballast The master transhipped the cargo with the knowledge, but without the assent or dissent of pltf., into three other vessels, under bills of lading excepting the negligence of the masters & crews. Two of these vessels with their cargoes were, through the negligence of their masters & crews, lost before reaching the port of discharge. Defts. obtained a decree limiting their liability arising out of the collision to £8 per ton & the proceeds were distributed to claimants, of whom pltf. was not one. In an action for non-delivery of the portion of the cargo lost:—Held: defts. were liable; for the loss did not arise from an excepted peril, & the transhipment, though justifiable, was for the purpose of earning the freight under the charterparty.

I find that the transhipment of the cargo from the Bernina to the three other steamers was justifiable & prudent & that the cargo was shipped in the three steamers on account of the defts. & to enable them to earn their freight (HANNEN, P.). —THE BERNINA (1886), 12 P. was damaged, but part of it could have been dried & conveyed in a merchantable condition to L., the port of discharge. 3301. —— —— ——.]—Where a ship is by perils of the sea so much damaged as to be incapable of repair so as to prosecute the adventure, except at an expense exceeding her value together with the freight when repaired, the master is justified in abandoning the voyage, & is not bound as agent of his owner to send the goods on in another bottom.

In an action upon a policy on goods from Cadiz to Monte Video & Buenos Ayres, & also "on cash on account of freight, £216," the declaration alleged the shipment of the goods & the prepayment of the £216 on account of freight, & then proceeded to aver that, whilst prosecuting the voyage, the vessel encountered a storm, & sustained so much damage that she became & was disabled from proceeding without being repaired, & could not be repaired so as to proceed on the voyage without incurring an expense greater than her value would have been when repaired, together with the freight which she would have earned on the said voyage ; that, the ship being so disabled from continuing the voyage with the goods on board, the master was obliged to & did abandon the voyage & the earning of the residue of the freight ; that the freighter procured two other vessels to carry the goods on, at a rate of freight exceeding the freight originally payable under the charter-party ; & that the £216 so paid in cash on account of freight as aforesaid, by reason of the premises, became & was wholly lost to pltf. The declaration then went on to aver that one of the substituted vessels sustained so much damage that she was obliged to put back to Gibraltar ; & there unload, & the goods were sent on to Monte Video by the other ; & that, by reason of the premises, pltf. sustained a total loss of the £216 so paid in cash on account of freight as aforesaid, & was put to charges in transhipping the goods, etc. :—Held : (1) the declaration disclosed a sufficient justification for the master's abandoning the voyage, & consequently pltf. was entitled to recover as for a total loss of the pre-paid freight. B. Authority of Master to Hypothecate.

(a) In General.

3326. General rule—In case of necessity.]—(1) The master of the Copenhagen entered into a written contract with the owners of the three vessels; & I think the master had a right, under such circumstances of necessity, to bind both the owners of the ship & cargo in acting for their service: for a master, under circumstances of necessity, has a general right to hypothecate either of them, or to sell the cargo, or to throw any part of it overboard (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) When a ship having sustained damage at sea, comes in for repairs, & becomes unfit to perform the function for which she is engaged, to contain & to convey the cargo: that in such a case the owners of the ship should claim the expenses of repairs from the owners of the cargo, & at the same time refuse to pay any part of the charges of transhipping & conveying the cargo would be very unreasonable. The expenses, severally, may be matter of simple average, or the whole may be matter of general average. General average is for a loss incurred, towards which the whole concern is bound to contribute pro rata, because it was undergone for the general benefit & preservation of the whole. Simple or particular average is not a very accurate expression; for it means damage incurred by or for one part of the concern, which that part must bear alone; so that in fact it is no average at all, but still the expression is sufficiently understood, & received into familiar use. The loss of an anchor or cable, the starting of a plank, are matters of simple or particular average, for which the ship alone is liable. Should a cargo of wine turn sour on the voyage, it would be a matter of simple average, which the goods alone must bear; & there might be a simple average for which each would be severally liable under a misfortune happening to both ship & cargo at the time same, & from a common cause; as if a water spout should fall on a cargo of sugars, & a plank from the same violence should start at the same time. General average is that loss to which contribution must be made by both ship & cargo; the loss, or expense which the loss creates, being incurred for the common benefit of both. In this case the transhipping, or rather the unloading of the goods, seems to have been for the common benefit of both; for it was necessary to unload the ship, as well for its own repair, which was become indispensable, as for the preservation of the cargo; & therefore the expense of that transhipment, or rather of the unloading, seems to have upon it the character of a general average, though, possibly, it may be hardly worth while to consider the unloading as a charge distinct from the transshipment; & if so, it should seem to belong to the cargo only The expense of conveying the cargo to its ultimate destination belongs to the cargo only, the contract having been in effect determined by the payment of freight pro rata itineris. As to the expense of the repairs, I think that there is no ground to charge the cargo with that; for the reason, that the ship & the cargo being completely separated by the determination of the contract, & new vehicles provided at the expense of the cargo, the cargo is not answerable for those repairs which it in no degree occasioned (SIR WILIAM SCOTT).—THE COPENHAGEN, (1799), 1 Ch. Rob. 289; 165 E. R. 180.

3327. —— ——.]—Where a master of a ship at a foreign port borrows money on a bottomry bond for the repairs of the ship, secured upon the ship, freight, & cargo, & the bond is afterwards put in force, & the cargo seized, & the owner of the cargo, to release it, pays the money, he may recover from the owner of the vessel the money so paid.

It is the primary duty of the master, acting for the owner, to do his best to convey the cargo to its place of destination in the same ship, & in case of damage to repair it. . . . The owner of the goods is under no obligation to contribute to any expenses except such as constitute a general average. . . . To accomplish the object of repairing the vessel, the master is authorised to bind his owner by causing the repairs to be done on his credit, in which case the tradesman may sue the owner, or by borrowing money on his credit where that is necessary, in which case the lender has his remedy against the owner, or by selling a portion of the cargo, which is in effect borrowing from the shipper through the medium of a sale, . . . & in this case the shipper may sue the shipowner, or the master may hypothecate part of the whole of the cargo, which gives a right to the proprietor of it to recover a compensation from the owner of the vessel. All these are merely modes of raising money by the agent of the shipowner on his account, & for his use to enable him to do his duty by repairing the vessel, & in all the shipowner must pay the lender. The agency

3328. —— ——.]—DURANTY v. HART, THE HAMBURG (CARGO EX), No. 3142, ante.

(2) The meaning of the term "necessity," in respect of hypothecation by the master, being analogous to its meaning in other parts of the law.

The master of a vessel, chartered from Galveston, United States, to Liverpool, received before sailing from the charterer various sums in part payment of the freight, & after taking on board a cargo, sailed for the port of destination. The vessel, having in the prosecution of her voyage met with bad weather, & suffered damage, put into Bermuda, where the master incurred heavy expenses for repairs & supplies. The repairs were executed, & the supplies furnished, without any promise of a bottomry bond; but the law of Bermuda giving a right of arrest of the ship to the creditors for the repairs & supplies, the master, to complete the voyage, having written to the agent of the owners of the ship, & of the cargo, & not receiving any answer within the time an answer might have been returned, raised the funds necessary for the payment of such supplies on bottomry of the ship, cargo, & freight. The expenses of remaining at the port were very heavy, the cargo was falling greatly in value, & communication was uncertain. On a suit brought by the assignees of the bond, the owners of the ship not opposing, the ct. below pronounced for the validity of the bond, so far as it regarded the ship, cargo, & freight, & the ship was thereupon sold, but produced a sum far less than sufficient to cover the sum due on the bond. The consignees of the cargo, who were also entitled to the freight, claimed to retain in their hands the amount of freight, with interest & insurance, advanced by them in part payment before the commencement of the voyage, & paid the freight, short of that amount, into ct. The ct. below disallowed this abatement, & ordered the whole freight to be paid into ct. On appeal:—Held: (3) in the circumstances, the master was warranted in resorting to a bottomry bond, & the necessity of the case warranted the hypothecation of the cargo as well as the ship & freight, but (4), as the latter was, by the agreement between the charterer & the master, in part paid in advance, the retention of the amount of such prepayment by the consignees of the cargo, upheld, as the master, by hypothecating the chartered freight, could give no right to more freight than the owner had a right to demand from the charterer.

(5) In respect of communication with the owner either of ship or cargo, the possibility of so doing must be construed by estimating the cost & risk incidental to the delay from the attempt to make such communication, & the probability of failure after every execution should have been made (SIR WILLIAM ERLE).—DROEGE v. SUART, THE KARNAK (1869), L. 3330. —— ——.]—To constitute a valid bottomry bond the money must be required for the necessities of the ship, & the authority of the master to borrow money on bottomry is based on such necessity. Reasonable inquiries by a lender may be evidence of his bona fides, but will not make a bond valid in respect of the several items for which it is given to the full extent of such items unless they are actually & entirely necessary.

By the law of England the master in a foreign port has no authority to bind the shipowner or cargo owner, except in case of necessity. The rule should be even more stringent as regards the cargo owner, for the master does not take goods on board as his agent, & is not his agent at all, unless an overruling necessity arises during the voyage (BRETT, M.R.).—THE PONTIDA (1884), 9 P. 3332 i. What constitutes necessity—Repairs to ship.]—The master of a ship, in hypothecating the cargo as well as the ship for repairs executed at a foreign port to enable the vessel to prosecute the voyage, acts within the scope of his authority, thereby rendering the shipowners liable to indemnify the owners of the cargo in the event of the same being attached or sold by the holders of the respondentia bond, & that, irrespective of the validity of the bond as in a question between the holders thereof & the shipowners.—ANDERSTON FOUNDRY CO. v. LAW (1869), 7 Macph. 3332 ii. —— ——.]—A ship on a voyage from Newcastle to Liban came into collision with another vessel & put into Leith for repairs. The captain, who, along with the mate was owner of the ship, incurred a debt of £580 to a shipbroker, which included damages payable to the other vessel the cost of repairs, & other charges. Only a small part of this fund was chargeable against cargo, the bulk of it being chargeable only against ship & freight. The captain had no means of his own except a sum of £80. He granted a bond of bottomry over ship, freight, & cargo for £500. The owners of the cargo who were resident in Newcastle, got notice of the captain's intention to hypothecate the cargo, but refused to consent. The ship was sold for £155. The cargo was also sold:—Held: except to the extent of the freight, the bondholder had no right to the price of the cargo, as the master, in the circumstance, had no right to hypothecate it.—DYMOND v. SCOTT (1877), 5 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 196.—SCOT.

(2) Nothing can be better settled than that the master has a right to exercise this power [jettisoning cargo], in case of imminent danger. He may select what articles he pleases; he may determine what quantity; no proportion is limited; a fourth, a moiety, three-fourths, nay, in cases of extreme necessity, when the lives of the crew cannot otherwise be saved, it never can be maintained that he might not throw the whole cargo overboard. The only obligation will be that the ship should contribute its average proportion (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(3) Suppose the case of a ship driven into port with a perishable cargo, where the master could hold no correspondence with the proprietor; suppose the vessel unable to proceed, or to stand in need of repairs to enable her to proceed in time. In such emergencies, the authority of agent is necessarily devolved upon him. . . . What must be done? He must in such case exercise his judgment, whether it would be better to tranship the cargo, if he has the means, or to sell it. . . . He is not absolutely bound to tranship. . . . If he had not the means of transhipping he is under an obligation to sell (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE GRATITUDINE (1801), 3 Ch. Rob. 240; 165 E. R. 450.

3341. ——.]—(1) An American vessel laden with a cargo of timber, in the prosecution of a voyage, sustained damage, & was compelled to put into the Mauritius to repair & refit. She arrived there on June 11, 1870, & her master, being without funds, placed the ship in the hands of H. & co., a firm at the Mauritius, & they, before any attempt had been made to obtain money on the personal credit of the owners of the ship, who were affluent merchants in New York, proposed to advance money for the repairs on the master's draft on London, on his giving a bottomry bond on the ship, freight, & cargo, as collateral security. The master & H. & co., on July 29, wrote to the owners of the ship, informing them of this proposal, & on the same day the master & H. & co. wrote to the owners of the cargo, informing them that the vessel had sustained damage, & would have to undergo repair; but the letters to the owners of the cargo omitted all reference to the proposed loan on bottomry, & informed the owners of the cargo that they should hear further particulars by the next opportunity. The letters written by the master & H. & co. to the owners of the ship were forwarded by the owners of the ship to the owners of the cargo; but the owners of the cargo did not receive these letters till Sept. 8, when it was too late for them to communicate with the master by post. On Oct. 15, after the repairs had been completed, the master gave bills & executed a bottomry bond on the ship, freight, & cargo, according to the terms of the proposal made by H. & co., which had long before been assented to by him. The bills were made payable to H. & co., & were drawn on B. & co., their agents in London, at ninety days' sight. H. & co. gave the master a memorandum, stating that the bills were taken as collateral security, & that the bond should be cancelled on the prompt payment by the owners of the vessel to B. & co., of the amount of the bills. On Oct. 15 the ship sailed from the Mauritius, & safely arrived at Liverpool, her port of discharge, on Feb. 7, 1871. After the ship had sailed, the owners of the cargo were for the first time informed by letter from H. & co. that the bottomry bond had been given. The bond was transferred, & the bills of exchange were indorsed to B. & co. Neither the master nor the owners of the vessel had any funds in the hands of B. & co., & they neglected to provide funds to take up the bills, & informed B. & co. that they had determined not to take up the bond. In a suit to enforce the bond against the ship, freight, & cargo:—Held: the bond was invalid as to the cargo, on the ground that there was not, under the circumstances of the case, such a communication with the owners of the cargo as to satisfy the law.

A mere statement of injuries done to the ship, & of the consequent necessity of repairs, which would entail considerable expense, unaccompanied by a statement that a bottomry bond must be had recourse to, was not a sufficient communication to the owners. The law . . . may not require that the words bottomry of cargo should be used, but it requires that the fact itself should be stated, or, at least, that it should be an obvious & irresistable inference from circumstances stated (SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE).

Semble, the bond was also invalid as to the cargo, upon the ground that the prospect of benefit to the cargo was not such as to justify the master in granting a bottomry bond upon the cargo.

The master is to remember the foundation of his authority to give a bottomry bond on cargo is the prospect of benefit, direct or indirect, to the proprietor of it. . . . He may sell a part of the cargo, but not the whole. Why? Because the former act may be, the latter cannot be, for the benefit of the proprietor. . . . He must endeavour to accomplish the contract between two parties whom, for the occasion, he represents for the common benefit of ship & cargo & therefore, as in the case of the sale he may not sell the whole cargo, so neither may he do what is in effect the same—repair the ship at the sole expense of, & without reasonable probability of benefit to, the cargo. . . . The prospect of benefit must be such as a man of ordinary prudence & knowledge of the subject would in the circumstances entertain. The master must endeavour to hold the balance evenly between his two principals; he must not sacrifice the ship to the cargo or the cargo to the ship. . . . I do not think upon the evidence before me that a reasonable & prudent owner, if present, would have allowed his cargo to be bottomried for such very extensive repairs. He would rather have paid the freight & reshipped the goods (SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE).—THE ONWARD (1873), L. R. 4 A. & E. 38; 42 L. J. Adm. 61; 28 L. T. 204; 21 W. R. 601; 1 Asp. M. L. C. 540.

Pltf., a British subject at Danish West India Island, chartered a ship belonging to defts., who were French, for a voyage from St. Marc, in Haiti, to Havre, London or Liverpool, at the charterer's option, he knowing that the ship was French. The charterparty was entered into by the master in pursuance of his general authority as such, & not by any special authority from the owners. Pltf. shipped a cargo at St. Marc for Liverpool. On her voyage the ship sustained damage from a storm, which compelled her to put into a Portuguese port. There the master properly borrowed money upon bottomry of the ship, freight, & cargo, & repaired her, & she proceeded with the cargo & arrived safe at Liverpool. The bondholder proceeded in the Ct. of Admlty. against the ship, freight, & cargo, which being insufficient to satisfy the bond, he sued defts. as shipowners to indemnify him for the deficiency. Defts. abandoned the ship & freight in such a manner as by the French law absolved them from liability:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to recover, because the French law, as being that of the ship, governed the case.—LLOYD v. GUIBERT (1865), L. (b) Necessity for Communication with Owner.

3349. Duty to communicate.]—(1) Bottomry bond upon the ship, freight, & cargo, taken up by the master of a small Swedish vessel at a port in Sweden. Part of the cargo was consigned to England:—Held: considering the distance between Sweden & England, & the means of communication, it was essential to the validity of the bond, so far as the cargo was concerned, that the master should communicate with the owners of the cargo before resorting to hypothecation of the cargo, as he could have obtained an answer within a period not inconvenient with the exigency of the circumstances of the case.

(2) A Swedish vessel bound from a port in Sweden to Hull, was driven, by stress of weather, to put back into another port in Sweden. This took place on Nov. 21, 1848. Ten days afterwards the cargo was unladen, & the ship found to be greatly damaged. The repairs were completed, & the cargo re-loaded. The master at once communicated with the owners of the ship, resident in Sweden, who, being without funds, consented to the master taking up a bottomry bond for payment of the necessary repairs, & the British Consul at the port where the vessel lay, wrote on behalf of the master, & as his agent, to the consignees at Hull, informing them of the damage sustained by the vessel, but made no application for money, & referred to the necessity of repairs. No answer was made to this letter, & the master, in Mar. 1849, hypothecated the ship, freight, & cargo for the money borrowed for the repairs:—Held: such letter to the consignees was a sufficient notice to authorise the master raising money by bottomry on the cargo.—WILKINSON v. WILSON, THE BONAPARTE (1853), 8 Moo. The master, not being able to raise money on personal security to defray the expenses of the repairs, gave a bottomry bond, dated May 19, on the ship, freight, & cargo. The master, before hypothecating, did not communicate with the owner or consignees of the cargo by reason of the great delay & uncertainty in the transmission of letters from Key West at that time. A suit having been instituted against the vessel, her freight, & cargo, by the holders of the bottomry bond, the validity of which was contested by the consignees of the cargo:—Held: under the circumstances, the master was not bound to communicate with the consignees before hypothecating, & the bond was therefore binding upon the cargo.—THE LIZZIE (1868), L. 3373. Where ship abandoned as total loss—Part of cargo sold—Part transhipped.]—Bond on ship, freight, & cargo, the money to be paid within twenty-one days of the ship's arrival in the port of London, & not to be demanded or recovered in case the ship & her cargo be lost, miscarry, or be cast away on the voyage. The ship never reached the port of London, but was abandoned as for a total loss at Algoa Bay, where part of the cargo was sold, & the proceeds brought to England, & part put into another ship, & also brought to England. The fact that the ship could not be repaired was not proved:—Held: the bond must be pronounced for & enforced against the proceeds of the cargo, & the cargo transhipped.—THE ELEPHANTA (1851), 18 L. 3375. Amount recoverable—Limited to value of cargo.]—A bottomry bondholder entered an action against the ship, cargo, & freight. The owners of the cargo appeared, & gave bail in the sum of £350. The proceedings were in pœnam. The bond was pronounced for, the ship sold, the proceeds of sale & the freight were brought into the registry. The claims for wages, which proved unexpectedly heavy, having been settled, the deficiency on the ship's account for the bond & proctor's costs amounted to £409 9*s.* 2*d.* which the owners of the cargo were called upon to pay. They tendered £350, the amount of their bail. Motion for a monition against the owners of the cargo to pay the balance rejected:—Held: though the master may become ex necessitate agent of the owners of the cargo, he can render them liable only to the value of the cargo.—THE NOSTRA SENORA DEL CARMINE (1854), 1 Ecc. & Ad. 303; 4 L. 3377. —— ——.]—A mtgee. of ships who had also a lien on the cargoes, sold the ships & cargoes under an order of the ct., with the concurrence of the receiver, appointed in another suit for the administration of debtor's estate, & the master had allowed him 4 per cent. upon the proceeds arising from the sales by way of commission, which rate of commission he had been in the habit of receiving from the shipowner, who was then dead:—Held: (1) the mtgee. was not entitled to so large a brokerage; but he was entitled to a reasonable allowance, to be ascertained by the master, if the parties could not agree; (2) he was not entitled to any brokerage on the sale of another cargo, which he had sold as mtgee. without any order of the ct.—ARNOLD v. GARNER (1847), 2 Ph. 231; 16 L. Commissions charged at St. Thomas's of 2 per cent. on the value of cargo for storage, & of 2½ per cent. for landing & reshipping, disallowed, & in lieu thereof reasonable sums allowed.

Commission of 5 per cent. on cash advances reduced to 2½ per cent., according to the practice observed in the registry.

3379. —— Several owners—Recovery from each pro rata.]—(1) Where a vessel carrying cargo is stranded on a foreign coast & unable to proceed, & communication with the owners of the cargo would be attended with great delay & difficulty, the master of the ship, in order to transhipper & send on, may, on his own authority, give a respondentia bond to release the cargo lying under arrest for salvage.

(2) A bond, covering in part property not exposed to maritime risk, is bad as to that part, but may be valid as to the residue.

(3) Where a part only of goods hypothecated by a respondentia bond reaches its destination, such part is only liable to pay a proportional part of the money secured by the bond, namely, according to the proportion that the value of the goods brought to their destination bears to the total value of the property on which the bond was given.

(4) The whole difference then in fact between respondentia & bottomry is this: That in bottomry ship & freight are hypothecated as well as the cargo; in respondentia the cargo alone is hypothecated (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE SULTAN (CARGO EX) (1859), Sw. 504; 5 Jur. N. S. 1060; 166 E. R. 1235.

3380. —— Premium payable in default of payment.]—A bottomry bond on ship, freight, & cargo provided for payment of a bottomry loan, together with interest at 8 per cent., at or before the expiration of five days after the arrival of the ship at her port of discharge. The bond further provided that an additional premium of 10 per cent. on the loan should become payable if default was made in payment. The ship having arrived at her port of discharge, default was made in payment of the bond, & a suit was instituted by the bondholder against ship, freight, & cargo, to recover the amount of the loan & interest, & the additional premium of 10 per cent. :—Held : the additional premium of 10 per cent. could not be enforced against the cargo, but the bondholder was entitled to interest at 4 per cent. from the date when the bond became payable until payment.—THE SOPHIA COOK (1878), 4 P. D. 30; 49 L. J. P. 16.

3381. Foreign ship—Conclusiveness of foreign judgment.]—A foreign judgment of a competent ct. is conclusive, & not open to examination by another ct. unless the judgment impeached carries on the face of it manifest error; as if it is shown to have been obtained by fraud, or wanting in the condition of natural justice. Such judgment cannot be applied to persons other than those who were parties to the litigation decided by it, except in cases where the judgment is in rem.

A Greek ship having on board a cargo consigned to Malta, the port of destination, having encountered severe weather in her passage down the Black Sea, was obliged, for the preservation of her cargo, to jettison her boats, spars & cables, & being disabled, put into Constantinople, where the captain applied to the Greek Consular Ct., & obtained an order for a survey of the ship & cargo, & a sentence of average settlement, with the appointment of a curator, who by virtue of the authority conferred on him, hypothecated the cargo, & caused a bottomry bond to be executed thereon for freight & the necessary expenses of transhipping & forwarding the cargo. The cargo having been transhipped, arrived at Malta, where proceedings were taken in the Ct. of Commerce by the consignee to set aside the sentence of average settlement & to annul the bottomry bond. The Ct. of Commerce declared its incompetency to decide regarding the average settlement, but pronounced the bottomry bond null & void. On appeal to the Ct. of Appeal at Malta, that ct. reversed the decree of the Ct. of Commerce so far as regards its competency to decide the average act & settlement, & ordered, as regarded the decision of the nullity of the bottomry bond, that such decision should be set aside until a definite sentence on the average act & settlement should have been come to by the Ct. of Commerce. The Ct. of Commerce gave a decision on the case thus remitted against the consignee, which was equivalent to a nonsuit. On appeal from this decision, the Appellate Ct. of Malta were of opinion that the captain having taken the legal course before the Consular Tribunal at Constantinople, & that ct. having, on the report of experts, appointed a curator of the cargo, & declared the voyage ended at Constantinople, such curator was the attorney for the owners of the cargo, & had authority to hypothecate same; that where the formalities of a consular authority & verbal process justifying the expenses necessitating the loan are observed, the lender on the bottomry bond is exonerated from justifying the necessity for the loan or making inquiry as to the facts causing such necessity, & decided for the validity of the bond :—Held : the Greek Consular Ct. at Constantinople being a competent ct., having jurisdiction over a Greek ship & a cargo owned by Greek subjects, the sentence of that ct. was not open to examination by the Ct. of Commerce at Malta, & it must be presumed, in the absence of manifest error or fraud, that the Greek Consular Ct. rightly interpreted & applied the Greek law, by which they had the power they exercised of deciding that, in the circumstances, Constantinople should be considered the place of the ship's destination, & the average adjusted according to the law in force at that place; & the bottomry bond was, in the circumstances, necessary & valid.—MESSINA v. PETROCOCCHINO (1872), L. 3382. Priority of bondholder—As against claim for necessaries—Right to have assets marshalled.]—Although the proceeds of ship & freight would be exhausted by the holders of a bottomry bond on ship, freight, & cargo, the ct. refused to marshal the assets in favour of a claim for necessaries against ship & freight, on the ground that, the owners of ship & freight being different persons from the owners of cargo, third parties, namely, the cargo owners, would be prejudiced by being, in effect, made to pay the claim of the necessaries men with which they had no concern.—THE CHIOGGIA, [1898] P. 1; 66 L. 3383. Right against master—Failure of master to give notice of bond.]—I shall order the freight to be brought in. With respect to the shippers abroad, the law is clear, that where the master has deserted his duty, & given no notice of a bond, he is to be answerable; the owners of the goods must have recourse to him; he has neglected this duty. But those who knew of the existence of the bond should have taken care to whom they paid the freight; the laches is theirs. A cargo of a British merchant, however valuable, may be made the subject of bottomry for any debts due by the owner of the vessel, where, by law, the power of arresting the ship exists. If a bond be valid, the owner of the cargo must pay, not

The master is bound to employ the telegraph as a means of communication, where it can usefully be done; but the state of the particular telegraph, the way in which it is managed, & the possibility of transmitting explanatory messages, are proper subjects to be considered in determining the question of the practicability of communication.

The fact that the master cannot communicate with all the owners of a general cargo does not of itself justify him in selling without communication with any of the owners; but this fact, increasing the embarrassment of the master, is to be considered when an estimate of his conduct has to be formed.

A sale of cargo by the master may obviously be necessary, although another course might have been taken in dealing with it, for instance, if in this case the wool . . . could have been dried & repacked, & then stored & sent on, but at a cost to the owner clearly exceeding any possible value of it to him when so treated, it would plainly have been the duty of the master to sell (SIR MONTAGUE SMITH).—AUSTRALASIAN STEAM NAVIGATION Co. v. MORSE (1872), L. The ship sailed from Quebec, & on her voyage down the river St. Lawrence sprung a leak, & it became necessary for the preservation of the lives of the master & crew to run her on shore. One of the part owners & agent for the others resided at Quebec, & after two surveys, in which the surveyors stated, as their opinion, that it would be prudent to sell the ship & cargo, the master, under the direction of such part owner, sold the same. The ship however survived; was repaired by the purchasers, & afterwards brought a full cargo to London. 3418. Continuation of voyage impossible—Vessel hopelessly wrecked—No efforts at salvage made by master.]—On Apr. 19, an Austrian ship with a valuable cargo on board ran upon a rock on the eastern side of Algoa Bay, distant fifty miles by sea & about eighty by land from Port Elizabeth. The Austrian consul at Port Elizabeth came to the spot, & there being no hope of getting the vessel off, he advised the master to sell her with the cargo. The master accordingly advertised the ship & cargo for sale, & they were sold in one lot by auction on Apr. 30, for £9,500, after a brisk competition. The purchaser got some part of the cargo out of the wreck, but on June 19, the ship went to pieces with the rest of the cargo on board. The owners of the cargo having abandoned it to the underwriters as a total loss, the underwriters filed their bill to have the goods which had been brought to land delivered to them as not having been effectually sold. The master had not gone to Port Elizabeth, nor endeavoured to procure funds to enable him to save the cargo; nor had he made any effort to induce any persons to undertake the salvage of the cargo. Several witnesses at Port Elizabeth deposed that, in their opinion, no person could have been induced to undertake the salvage; others gave their opinion that offers to save the cargo could have been obtained if a large percentage of the net proceeds had been offered. There was a good deal of evidence to show that, in the opinion of persons on the spot, the course which had been adopted of selling the wreck & cargo was the most advisable one in the interest of all parties concerned:—Held: no such necessity was proved to have existed as would make the master the agent of the owners of the cargo to effect a sale; the sale was void; & pltfs. were entitled to the cargo saved, subject to a proper allowance for salvage & other expenses.

The master becomes agent for sale of the cargo . . . only where there is a necessity for that course, & it lies on those who claim title to cargo, as purchasers from the captain, to prove that this necessity clearly existed (COTTON, L.J.).—ATLANTIC MUTUAL INSURANCE CO. v. HUTH (1880), 16 Ch. 3435. —— —— ——.]—Where the master of a vessel sells part of a shipper's goods at an intermediate port, in order to raise money to provide for the repairs or other expenses of the vessel, which are necessary to enable him to prosecute & complete the voyage, & the vessel does not arrive at her port of destination, the shipper is not entitled to receive the clear value for which the goods would have sold at that port.

A declaration in assumpsit stated, that deft. was the owner of a certain ship then at a certain foreign port, & bound from thence to the port of London in Great Britain, & that pltf. caused certain goods of his to be shipped on board the ship, to be conveyed to London for certain freight; that the ship set sail, & on her voyage was much injured by tempestuous weather; & that the master was obliged to put into an intermediate port to have her repaired; & that, for the purpose of such repairs, & to pay them, & to enable the ship to leave that port, it became necessary for the master to raise a sum of money; & that, without doing so, the ship would have been unable to leave the port or to proceed to sea; & that, because the master could not otherwise raise the amount necessarily required, he sold certain of pltfs.'s goods, & with the amount so realised he paid the expenses of the repairs, etc. The declaration then stated, that deft., in consideration of the premises, promised pltf. to pay him the value for which the goods would have been sold if they had been delivered by deft. to pltf. at London.

Plea to the declaration, so far as the same claims to recover damages to a greater amount than the value of the ship, & freight thereinafter mentioned, that pltf. ought not to maintain his action to recover any damages to a greater amount than aforesaid, because, after the goods were shipped, & before any part thereof had been conveyed to the port of L., & whilst they were in the custody & under the control of the master, the master wrongfully, & without any authority in that behalf from deft., & without his knowledge, privity, or consent, sold the goods, & deft. thereby was unable to deliver them to pltfs.; & that, at the several times, deft. was the owner of the ship, being a British vessel & duly registered; that the goods were shipped by being received into the custody of the master, & deft. never personally accepted or received, nor did he interfere with them or the shipping, or the sale, except as such owner of the vessel; & that the shipping & sale took place after Sept., 1813; &, that the sale was done without the fault or privity of deft.; & further, that the value of the ship, together with the value of the freight due, or to grow due during the voyage, did not exceed a certain sum named. Verification, & prayer of judgment:—Held: (1) the declaration was bad in substance; (2) the plea was bad, as being pleaded to the damages merely. Semble: the plea did not disclose any defence under 53 Geo. 3, c. 159, upon which it professed to be founded.—ATKINSON v. STEPHENS (1852), 7 Exch. 567; 21 L. 3436. —— Option to treat proceeds of sale as loan.]—(1) Freight was payable by the terms of a charterparty upon delivery of cargo at the port of destination. The ship meeting with sea damage from heavy weather, the captain at an intermediate port justifiably sold part of the cargo shipped by the charterer, to raise funds for the necessary repairs. The cargo so sold fetched more than it would have done if carried to the port of destination. The ship, having completed her master of a vessel without the consent of the owner of the goods it is not sufficient to show that they were not in a condition to forward; it should further appear that it was necessary to sell them at the time they were sold, & that before the sale it was impossible to communicate with the owner his instructions as to what should be done with them.—HOLMES v. UNION S.S. repairs, proceeded to the port of destination with the remainder of the cargo. A general average statement was afterwards made up, under which the charterer received from the shipowner the amount realised by the cargo sold at the intermediate port. The shipowner claimed from the charterer freight pro rata itineris on the cargo so sold:—Held: he was not entitled to such freight.

(2) [The charterer] has, I think, an option to treat the proceeds of the sale as a loan, or he may say, "You have sold my goods against my will, & though by the maritime law that is not a wrongful sale, still I am entitled to & claim an indemnity against any loss occasioned by the sale (BRETT, J.).

(3) The basis of the claim of indemnity . . . is the supposition that the goods would fetch more at the port of destination than they did when sold. . . . If the goods fetch more at the intermediate port, the owner of the cargo naturally would elect to treat the matter as a loan, but when he thinks it is for his interest to insist & does insist on an indemnity . . . then he must allow for the freight that would have been earned by carrying them [to their destination] (BRETT, J.).—HOPPER v. BURNESS (1876), 1 C. 3441. —— Action for money had & received—Whether waiver of claim for damages in tort.]—(1) Where in a charterparty freight was to be paid at so much per ton, on a right & true delivery of the homeward bound cargo, from Honduras Bay to London; & the ship & cargo, after capture & recapture, having been wrecked at St. Kitt's, into which they were carried by the recaptors, a sale of the cargo was directed by the Vice Admlty. Ct. there, on the application of the master acting bonâ fide for the benefit of all concerned, but without orders from any; & the proceeds of the sale were remitted to the shipowners:—Held: the freighter might recover such proceeds in assumpsit for money had & received, without allowing freight pro ratâ itineris. For such form of action for the proceeds of an illegal sale of goods is only a waiver of any claim for damages for the tortious act; taking the actual proceeds of the sale as the value of the goods, subject to the legal consequences of considering the demand as a debt, which admits of a set-off, etc., but does not recognise the right of the vendor so to convert the goods. & here the act of conversion, for such it must be taken to be, being made by the master, who is the general agent of the shipowners; & not by the act of a ct. of competent jurisdiction, was unlawful, & discharged the claim of the shipowners for freight pro ratâ itineris. But pltf. could not recover against the shipowners upon special counts framed upon the bills of lading signed by the master; as well because they contained exceptions of the very perils by which the loss happened; as because defts., having expressly contracted with pltf. under seal could not be charged in respect of the same subject-matter by a contract not under seal, & signed by their master only, & not by themselves.

(2) The shipowners undertake that they will carry the goods to the place of destination, unless prevented by the dangers of the seas, or other unavoidable casualties, & the freighter undertakes that if the goods be delivered at the place of their destination he will pay the stipulated freight, but it is only in that event, viz. of their delivery at the place of destination, that he, the freighter, engages to pay anything (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—HUNTER v. PRINSEP (1808), 10 East, 378; 103 E. A cargo of opium, shipped at Calcutta, was, by the bill of lading, to be delivered at Hong Kong to resps. The ship came in collision at sea, with another vessel, & received so much injury as to compel her to put in at Singapore, where the cargo was found to be partially damaged by the salt water. The master, who acted bonâ fide & to the best of his judgment, selected the damaged chests of opium & sold them by auction, & forwarded the remainder to Hong Kong. It appeared that the master might have had the damaged opium re-dried & repacked while the vessel was refitting, & have forwarded it, though deteriorated in value, with the other opium. Under such circumstances, in an action brought by the consignees against the shipowner for the value of the opium damaged & sold:—Held: it was the duty of the master to carry the cargo to its place of destination, as the goods could have been delivered in a merchantable, although damaged state.—TRONSON v. DENT (1853), 8 Moo. 3449. —— —— Effect of prior recovery against shipowners.]—The master of a ship which was injured by the perils of the sea, put into the Mauritius, & there abandoned the ship & cargo, which were afterwards sold under an order of the Vice-Admiralty Ct. there, & the proceeds paid into that ct. The cargo was not damaged or perishable, nor was there any pressing necessity for the sale of it. The owners of the cargo brought an action on the case against the owners of the ship for wrongfully selling the cargo instead of carrying it to London, according to their contract, with a count in trover, & recovered a general verdict for the value of the ship & freight, which was one-fifth of the value of the cargo. They also sent out a power of attorney to an agent at the Mauritius to procure from the Vice-Admiralty Ct. there the proceeds of the sale which had been paid in. The agent demanded them, but they had been previously remitted to the High Ct. of Admlty. in this country. In an action for money had & received by the owners against the purchaser of the goods:—Held: (1) the captain had not any authority to sell the cargo, although acting bonâ fide & under the order of the Vice-Admiralty Ct.; (2) the recovery against the owners of the ship was no answer to the present action; (3) the proceeds of the sale at the Mauritius not having been paid when demanded, pltfs. were in the same situation as if no such demand had been paid, & therefore entitled to recover the value of the goods from deft.—MORRIS v. ROBINSON (1824), 3 B. & C. 196; 5 Dow. & Ry. 3450. Right against shipowner & master jointly—Damages for conversion.]—Trover lies against a shipowner for a sale by the master of goods, at a place short of their port of destination, under circumstances not inconsistent with the general scope of the authority conferred upon the master by the owner. A cargo of salt was shipped by pltf. at Liverpool, for Calcutta, under a bill of lading making the same deliverable to A. & co., on payment of freight there, "as per charterparty." The ship sustained damage in quitting the harbour at Liverpool, & ultimately became so leaky that the master was compelled to run for Bahia, where, finding the state of the ship such as to render her incapable of continuing the voyage, & being unable to forward the salt to its destination, he sold it by public auction, remitting the proceeds to his owner, who tendered the amount, after making deductions for general average & expenses, to pltfs.:—Held: (1) the master & owner were jointly liable for the conversion; (2) it was not necessary for pltf. to give the charterparty in evidence; (3) the jury were warranted in estimating the damages at the cost price of the salt & the sum which pltf. had paid on account of freight.

I do not very well see how else they could estimate the value of the goods to the shipper than by taking the cost price, & adding thereto the expense incurred in getting them towards the merchant. What the cargo fetched by a forced sale at Bahia, clearly was no fair test. Pltf. did not want the goods there (CRESSWELL, J.).—EWBANK v. NUTTING (1849), 7 C. B. 797; 13 L. T. O. S. 94; 137 E. Right against brokers—As agents for purchasers of cargo.]—A. acting for B., a foreign principal, but in his own name bought of C., in London, a cargo of wheat on board a certain vessel represented to be on its way from Galatz, payments to be made in cash on delivery of the shipping documents. Having paid the price at the request of his principal, A. drew upon him for the amount, & the bill was duly paid. B. afterwards came to London, saw the contract, & ratified all that A. had done. It turned out that the cargo had been fraudulently disposed of by the captain prior to the date of the contract of sale by C. to A.:—Held: B. could not maintain an action against A. to recover back the money paid, as upon a failure of consideration; but his only remedy, whether in his own name or in that of A., was against C., the seller.—RISBOURG v. BRUCKNER (1858), 3 C. 3452. —— As agents of shipowners.]—On June 24 defts., who were ship brokers, wrote to pltfs., offering them "room" in a ship called F. K. Dumas for certain cement & stone from London to Callao. On June 25 defts. chartered the ship for the voyage, the charterparty providing (inter alia) that the whole ship should be at the disposal of the charterers, except the space necessary for the crew & stores; that the master & owners should give the same attention to the cargo, & in every respect be responsible to all whom it might concern, as if the ship were loaded at her berth by & for the owners independently of the charter; that the master was to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight the charterers might require without prejudice to the charterparty; & that the charterers' responsibility, except for freight, should cease on the vessel being loaded. On June 26 an agreement was made between defts., acting for the owners of the F. K. Dumas, & pltfs., that the former should receive on board cement & stone at certain freight from London to Callao, & sail on a certain day: freight to be paid one half on signing bills of lading, & the remainder on final discharge at Callao. The cement & stone were shipped, the half freight paid, & the master signed bills of lading making the remainder payable at Callao. On her voyage the ship, being damaged by bad weather, put into an intermediate port, where the vessel was condemned. The master, being unable to forward pltfs.' goods to their destination, sold them. In an action against defts. for their value, the jury found that the sale was not justified:—Held: on the construction of the above documents there was no contract between pltfs. & defts. for the carriage of the goods from London to Callao.

As they are not principals, the only action that could be maintained against them would be that they professed to have an authority which they really did not possess. An agent who has no authority to make contracts cannot be sued as a principal (BRAMWELL, L.J.).—WAGSTAFF v. ANDERSON (1880), 5 C. P. D. 171; 49 L. J. Q. B. 485; 42 L. T. 720; 28 W. R. 856; 4 Asp. The vessel struck on the rocks on the coast of Norway, but the cargo was landed safely. A survey was held, when the surveyors recommended, as best for all parties, that the ship & cargo should be sold, & the cargo was sold accordingly. It appeared, that by the law of Norway, though the captain might not under such circumstances be able to justify the sale as between himself & the owners of the cargo, an innocent purchaser would have a good title to the property bought at such sale:—Held: the sale in Norway bound the property, & the goods, having afterwards come to this country, the owner claiming under such sale had a good title to them as against the underwriters to whom the cargo had been abandoned.—CAMMELL v. SEWELL (1860), 5 H. & N. 728; 29 L. 3462. Wrongful sale—Right to sue in trover.]—By an agreement between A., the owner of a ship, & B. & C., the ship was to be placed under the management of B. & C. to load outwards from Liverpool with a cargo for the Cape, Singapore, etc., consigned to their houses at these several ports. Before proceeding on the voyage, the captain received from B. & C. a letter of instruction, desiring him to proceed on his return from Singapore to the Cape, in which letter was the following passage: "on your arrival there, you will call upon our managing partner D., & follow such directions there as he may give you regarding such part of the cargo as is consigned to his firm, & which he requires to be landed there." At Singapore, B. & C. shipped coffee for London, to be delivered to the shippers' order, pursuant to bills of lading signed by the captain, & indorsed, without his knowledge, to certain persons in London. When the ship arrived at the Cape, the coffee being found to be in a heated state, was, by the orders of D., unshipped & sold. A. was afterwards compelled to pay the consignees of the coffee for the non-delivery thereof, D. being examined upon interrogatories, expressly stated that he was not a partner with B. & C. In case brought by A. against B. & C., for wrongfully unshipping & selling certain coffee at the Cape of Good Hope, the declaration alleged, that " defts., by their agents at the said several ports, had & exercised the management & direction, ordering, control & government of the said ship, touching & in relation to the loading & unloading & freighting the same, & the consignment & disposition of the outward & homeward cargo thereof " :—Held : having as shipowner the possession of, & a special property in, the coffee which had been wrongfully sold at the Cape, he, pltf., was entitled to recover on a count in trover.—BROCKBANK v. ANDERSON (1844), 7 Man. & G. 295 ; 7 Scott, N. #### A. In General.

3464. Liberty to overcarry—Discharge impossible without undue detention—Undue detention due to negligence—Of shipowner's agents.]—A bill of lading contained the following clause : " If in the opinion of the master discharge cannot be effected without undue detention, the steamer shall have liberty to overcarry the cargo to London at merchant's risk, & deliver there to consignees or their assigns."

The ship was delayed at a port of call in the course of her voyage by the negligence of the shipowner's agents, with the result that, on her arrival at the port where the goods were to be discharged, the master found that the discharge could not be effected without undue detention, & he therefore overcarried the goods to London. In an action by the consignee to recover damages for the overcarriage of the goods :—Held : the damage was not so remote from the negligence of the shipowner's agents as to disentitle the consignee from succeeding in the action.—SEARLE v. LUND (1904), 90 L. 3465. Proviso for lightening cargo—To allow ship to enter port—Expenses of lightening caused by negligence—Recovery by charterer.]—A shipowner is not entitled to burden the undertaking of the charterer of his vessel by using the space therein reserved for himself for a purpose which has no connection whatever with the voyage for which the vessel is engaged.

A charterparty provided that a steamer should load " a full & complete cargo . . . not exceeding what she can reasonably stow & carry over her tackle, apparel, provisions, & furniture," & proceed to a certain port & " there lighten at receiver's expense as much of the cargo as may be found necessary to allow steamer to enter, at all times of high water, such port." The charterers lightened cargo at a port in anticipation of difficulty in getting into the next port. The shipowners then loaded a larger amount of bunker coal than was required for the chartered voyage, necessitating a second lightening outside the port of discharge :—Held : the charterers were entitled to recover the expenses of the second lightening from the shipowners, to whom the same had been paid under protest.—DARLING v. RAEBURN, [1907] 1 K. 3471. Arrival at gate of dock.]—(1) A charterparty for a ship to sail to " London Surrey Commercial Docks " is not satisfied by the ship arriving at the gate of the docks but not entering into the docks.

(2) There is no established custom in the port of London by which the charterer of a timber-loaded ship is bound to secure for the vessel, on its arrival in the river, & in close contiguity to the docks named, the authority to enter into the docks. The charterparty was to " London Surrey Commercial Docks, or as near thereto as she may safely get, & lie always afloat." As the docks were full the ship could not be given a discharging berth, & the dock manager therefore refused it entrance into the docks. Both parties having named these docks in the charterparty, this refusal of the dock authorities was held not to be the fault of either party. The cause of the delay as to being admitted into the docks was immaterial ; the length of the delay was material. The charterer would not name any other docks to which the ship might be taken. The ship's master therefore took it to the Deptford Buoys, the nearest place to the Surrey Commercial Docks where it could lie in safety afloat, & there discharged the cargo by lighters carrying the timber into the Surrey Commercial Docks, where it was afterwards sorted & put in order on the wharf :—Held : under the circumstances existing in this case, the delay in discharging the cargo was to be attributed to the charterer, who therefore became liable to demurrage, & to the charges for unloading.

(3) The contract in the charterparty as to demurrage was this : The cargo was to be supplied as fast as it could be taken on board, " & to be received at port of discharge as fast as steamer can deliver as above . . . & ten days' demurrage over & above the said laying-days " [there were no laying-days mentioned in the charterparty] " at £30 per day, payable day by day, it being agreed that for the payment of all freight, dead freight, & demurrage, the owner shall have absolute charge & lien on the said cargo. . . ." " The cargo to be brought to & taken from alongside the ship at merchants' risk & expense." The ship did not fulfil the engagement in the charterparty to proceed to the Surrey Commercial Docks by merely going to the gates of the docks, but when it had fulfilled the alternative to go as near thereto as it could safely get, the charterer was bound to take the cargo from alongside at his risk & expense. The shipowner was not bound to wait for an unreasonable period, until the dock authorities should be able to assign the ship a discharging berth in the docks. When that difficulty arose about the ship being admitted into the Surrey Commercial Docks, & the charterer would not name any other docks or place where the vessel might be unloaded, the shipowner gave notice to the charterer of the discharge of the cargo by lighters, & on taking the timber into the docks, gave notice to the dock authorities that it was delivered there subject to the claim for freight, demurrage, & delivery charges:—Held: he was warranted in so doing.

(4) There may be many possibilities within the contemplation of the contract of charterparty which are not actually present to the minds of the parties at the time of making it, & when one or other of these possibilities becomes a fact, the meaning of the contract must be taken to be, not what the parties did intend, for they had neither thought, nor intention regarding it, but that which the parties, as fair & reasonable men, would presumably have agreed upon if, having such possibility in view, they had made express provision as to these several rights & liabilities in the event of its occurrence (LORD WATSON).

(5) When by terms of a charterparty, a loaded vessel is destined to a particular dock or as near thereto as she may safely get, the first of these alternatives constitutes a primary objection, & in order to complete her voyage the vessel must proceed to & into the dock named, unless it has become in some sense impossible to do so (LORD WATSON).

(6) The legal effect, as regards the obligation on the merchant, is, I think, that he binds himself, on the ship arriving at the place where it is to be delivered, to take the cargo from alongside, & for that purpose to provide the proper appliances for taking delivery there. . . . If the ship may not get safely further than the entrance of the docks, . . . the merchant must provide lighters & other craft to take the cargo from alongside (LORD BLACKBURN).

(7) If the ship got to a discharging berth within the dock, the merchant was, by himself, or the dock co. as his agents, to provide proper means for landing the cargo on the quay (LORD BLACKBURN). —DAHL v. NELSON, DONKIN & CO. 3477. Named port blocked with ice—Discharge at intermediate port.]—A cargo of railway bars was shipped under a charterparty to be carried from a port in England to Taganrog, in the Sea of Azof, or so near thereto as the ship could safely get, freight to be paid in London against certificate of right delivery of cargo. On the arrival of the ship, on Dec. 17, at Kertch, which was as near as he could then get to Taganrog, the captain found the sea blocked with ice till the ensuing spring; & he proceeded to discharge the cargo, notwithstanding the opposition of the charterers' agent. By the bill of lading the cargo was deliverable at Taganrog to a Russian railway co. "freight & other conditions as per charterparty." As no bill of lading was produced at Kertch, the captain placed the cargo in charge of the custom-house authorities; & they, on Dec. 27, delivered it to the agent of the railway co. on his producing written authority from the co., together with copies of the charterparty & bill of lading, notwithstanding the captain's claim to retain it until the freight was paid. The agent of the co. gave a written acknowledgment that he had received the cargo

3478. Canal insufficiently deep—Discharge of part of cargo at mouth.]—By the terms of a charterparty the ship was to take in a full cargo at Bombay, & proceed therewith to a safe port on the continent between Havre & Hamburg as ordered, "or so near thereto as she might safely get." The cargo was to be brought to & taken from alongside at merchant's risk & expense. The ship was ordered by the charterers to Koogerpolder in Holland. Koogerpolder is some distance up a canal, & the vessel with her full cargo on board drew too much water to proceed up the canal. No arrangements had been made by the charterers or consignees for taking delivery of any part of the cargo at the mouth of the canal. The portion of the cargo that required to be unloaded in order to enable the vessel to enter the canal was at least a third. The question arising under these circumstances between the shipowners & the charterers which of them ought to bear the expenses of lightering the cargo from the mouth of the canal to Koogerpolder:—Held: under the circumstances, the voyage under the charterparty ended at the mouth of the canal, & consequently the charterers ought to bear the above-mentioned expenses.—CAPPER & CO. v. WALLACE (1880), 5 Q. The master, being unable to go to the port ordered, discharged the cargo in the United Kingdom. Pleas: (a) as to deft. not communicating with pltfs., that deft. was not bound so to communicate, (b) as to the residue of declaration, that deft. waited a reasonable time at Elsinore downward for orders, but no orders were given or sent by pltfs. to Elsinore within a reasonable time; wherefore deft., after the lapse of a reasonable time for the receipt of orders, proceeded with the ship & cargo to Leith, being a good & safe port in the Firth of Forth, without any notice or knowledge that pltfs. did not wish the ship & cargo to proceed there or did not require the cargo there. 3490. —— —— —— ——.]—Pltfs., the shipowners, chartered a ship to defts., the charterers, to carry a cargo of grain. The charterparty provided that when loaded the ship was to proceed to a named port of call & there await orders as to the port of discharge. It further provided that "Orders as to port of discharge are to be given to the master within twenty-four hours after receipt by consignees, the charterers, of master's telegraphic report . . . of his arrival at the port of call, & for any detention waiting for orders, after the aforesaid twenty-four hours, the charterers or their agents shall pay to the steamer 30*s.* per hour. . . ." The steamer was detained at the port of call for over thirteen days. The sole cause of the detention was the deliberate refusal of the charterers to name a port of discharge. It suited their business arrangements to keep the steamer at the port of call. They admitted liability & paid a sum calculated at 30*s.* an hour for the period of detention less twenty-four hours. The shipowners treated the contract as still being in operation during the period of detention, but they contended that the detention clause had no application in the circumstances which had happened & that they were entitled to damages at common law. In an arbn., the umpire found in favour of the shipowners:—Held: the charterers were not entitled deliberately to neglect & refuse to send orders as to the port of discharge, but the shipowners, having treated the ship as being detained under the clause in question, were only entitled to damages at the agreed rate; & the charterers were not entitled to deduct a commission from the sum paid for detention.—ETHEL RADCLIFFE S.S. 3491. —— —— Duty of ship to wait reasonable time.]—(1) A charterparty provided that the ship should proceed to a port of call for orders concerning the port of discharge; that orders should be given to the master within twenty-four hours after receipt of his report of his arrival at the port of call, & that for any detention of the ship while awaiting orders after the twenty-four hours the charterers should pay the shipowners extra remuneration. Orders not having been sent within the twenty-four hours aforesaid, but having been sent within twenty-four hours after they had elapsed:—Held: it was the duty of the shipowners to have the ship at the port of call for the twenty-four hours & for a reasonable time thereafter; in the circumstances twenty-four hours after the expiration of the first period of twenty-four hours was a reasonable time; &, the ship having left before this reasonable time had elapsed, the owners had committed a breach of the charterparty.

(2) The charterers sold the cargo on board the ship as "shipped per W. arrived St. Vincent." The ship had arrived at St. Vincent, but, through the shipowners' breach of the charterparty, had left before the date of the contract. On discovering this the purchasers refused to accept the cargo except at a sum which was £300 below the contract price, to which the charterers agreed:—Held: it was a condition of the contract that the ship should have arrived at St. Vincent & should be there at the date of the contract; the purchasers were entitled to refuse the cargo except upon the terms that the contract price should be reduced by £300, & this compromise was a reasonable one, consequently the charterers could recover the sum of £300 from the shipowners as damages for the breach of the charterparty.—PROCTER GARRETT MARSTON, LTD. v. OAKWIN S.S. 3496. What constitutes breach of charterparty—Express condition against "ice bound port"—Liability of charterer for damage to ship by ice.]—A steamer was chartered for a Baltic round voyage in winter. The charterparty contained the following clause : "The steamer shall not be ordered to any port where fever or pestilence is present, or any port blockaded, or where hostilities are being carried on, or any icebound port, or any port where lights or lightships are or are about to be withdrawn by reason of ice or war, or where there is risk that in the ordinary course of things the steamer will not be able on account of ice to enter the port or to get out after having completed loading or discharging, nor shall the steamer be obliged to force ice." The charterers ordered the steamer to Abo, a port in Finland, which is naturally icebound in winter, but is kept open all the year by means of ice breakers employed for that purpose by the Govt. of Finland. On the voyage to Abo the steamer encountered ice. The captain tried to force his way through, but failed, & the steamer remained fast in the ice until released by an ice breaker from Stockholm. The captain then continued his voyage & reached Abo. There it was found that the steamer had been injured by contact with the ice. The shipowners sued the charterers for breaches of the charterparty ; (a) in ordering the steamer to an icebound port ; (b) in ordering her to a port on her way to which she was obliged to force ice :—Held : (1) Abo was not an icebound port within the meaning of the charterparty, & there had been no breach by the charterers as firstly alleged ; (2) on the true construction of the charterparty there had been no breach by the charterers as secondly alleged.—LIMERICK S.S. 3500. —— Right of shipowner against consignor—Costs of defending action by consignee.]—A shipowner entered into a charterparty with the consignor of goods by which he was to deliver them at a good & safe port to be named by the consignor. The consignor named a port at which it was found that the ship could not safely unload, & the captain proceeded elsewhere & unloaded. The consignee brought an action against the captain for damages for delivering elsewhere ; the consignor wrote to the captain : "We would recommend you to settle the matter in the best way you can." The shipowner defended the action & was ultimately successful ; but he incurred considerable costs in excess of those which the unsuccessful party had to pay :—Held : in an action by the shipowner against the consignor, such costs not being damages flowing from the consignor's breach of contract, & the consignor not having given authority to incur them, the shipowner could not recover them ; the amount recoverable by the shipowner in respect of port dues was only the difference between what he would have paid had the ship unloaded at the port named, & what he actually did pay ; & insurance on the voyage from the port named to a safe port must be taken to have been included in the claim for demurrage, which had been allowed in full.—EVANS v. BULLOCK (1877), 38 L. 3501. —— Duty of master to discharge in safe port.]—Pltfs. shipped goods which were contraband of war on defts.' ship for carriage from London to Yokohama under a bill of lading containing the exception of "restraint of princes," & also a special clause that "if the entering of or discharging in the port, of discharge, shall be considered by the master unsafe by reason of war . . . the master may land the goods at the nearest safe & convenient port." The ship also carried goods belonging to other shippers. In the course of her voyage the ship arrived at Hong Kong, & on the day of her arrival there war was declared between China & Japan. There were at that time several Chinese war-vessels in & round the port of Hong Kong, & if the master had attempted to sail thence with the pltfs.' goods on board there would have been a serious danger of their being seized & confiscated. The master accordingly landed them there. In an action for breach of contract to carry the goods to Yokohama :—Held : (1) the risk of the goods being seized, if attempted to be carried further, amounted to a "restraint of princes" within the exception ; (2) such risk of seizure, on the voyage between Hong Kong & Yokohama, rendered the "entering of or discharging in the port" of Yokohama unsafe within the meaning of the special clause ; (3) the master's duty to take care of the cargo justified him, apart from any exceptions in the bill of lading, in landing pltfs.' goods where he did.—NOBEL'S

The ship arrived at Rochester on Oct. 24, & was moored at a place called the Buoys, which was distant about 300 yards from C.'s wharf. The master then gave deft.'s agent notice that the ship was ready to discharge the cargo; deft.'s agent ordered the master to proceed with the ship to C.'s wharf. The charterparty being open, the place of discharge has necessarily to be supplied. It cannot, I think, be reasonably contended that a foreign master entering this port, perhaps for the first time, was entitled to select the dock which he considered to be "the usual place of discharge," & to disregard the direction of the proprietor of the cargo as to the dock in which his interests required that the cargo should be delivered (SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE).—THE FELIX (1868), L. 3540. Right of shipowner—Damages to ship's bottom—Against consignee.]—Defts. had entered into a contract for a supply of stone to be delivered alongside a landing place at Iken Cliff, on the river Alde, in Suffolk, & the seller of the stone employed pltf.'s barge to carry the stone. Defts. had no interest in or right to use the bank of the river at Iken Cliff, except by permission of the owner obtained before they entered into the contract. At Iken Cliff there was no wharf or quay, or even bank, alongside which a barge could discharge, & there was no fixed or defined berth; but the landing place at Iken Cliff was a place at which barges such as pltf.'s could safely discharge by means of planks laid upon trestles from the barge to the bank of the river. Upon arrival at Iken Cliff, the master of the barge, by the advice of her pilot & a man in a fishing boat, selected a place as near the bank as her draught would permit, at which the barge was moored. She lay upon uneven ground & was damaged:—Held: defts. were not liable to pltf. for the damage, upon the ground that there was no representation, expressed or implied, by defts. that any particular spot was a proper place to take the ground, or to lie in for discharging; & it was for the master of the barge, knowing his own barge & her draught, to select the place where he would lie to discharge. He had no reason to expect that the bed of the river would be free from all inequalities, & there was nothing of which defts. were bound to give any warning to him.—PARKER v. PLOMESGATE RURAL COUNCIL (1903), 9 Com. On her arrival the berth alongside resps.' elevator, to which under the charter she was to proceed, was occupied by another vessel, & resps.' elevator was full. She was moved under protest to a position elsewhere, & after a few days she was able to get alongside the elevator, but the elevator was still full, & while she was waiting there to be lightered the water fell, & in settling down she rested on a large anchor in the harbour & sustained serious damage, in respect of which the action was brought:—Held: as the breach of contract immediately to lighter the vessel was the cause of the damage applts. were entitled to recover.—GREAT LAKES S.S. S. W. S. C. R. (L.) 207.—AUS.

Sect. 7.—The unloading: Sub-sect. 2, C. & D.] obligation of the charterers to unload did not commence till the vessel was berthed.

The end of a carrying voyage is sometimes when the ship arrives at a particular port, sometimes when she arrives in a river, & at others when she is in a dock. The contract does not express any particular berth, but it does express the equivalent to that in using the words "as ordered," which I take to mean as ordered by the charterers. Does that give the charterers the right to fix the place where the carrying voyage is to end? Even without authority I should say that it did, but Tapscott v. Balfour, No. 3851, post, has dealt with a charterparty in a similar form, where a particular dock has to be named, the necessary result of the agreement being that when the charterer exercises that power, the result is the same as if the dock had been named in the charterparty (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

(2) The option is given for the benefit of the person who has to exercise it. He is bound to exercise it in a reasonable time, but is not bound in exercising it to consider the benefit or otherwise of the other party. The option is to choose a port or berth or dock, that is one that is reasonably fit for the purpose of delivery. It will not do for instance to choose a dock the entrance to which is blocked. To limit the option of the charterer by saying that, in the choice of a berth, he is to consider the convenience of the shipowner, is to deprive him of the benefit of his option. The most that can be said is that the charterer does not exercise his option at all unless he chooses a berth that is free or is likely to be so in a reasonable time (BOWEN, L.J.).—THARSIS SULPHUR & COPPER CO. v. MOREL BROTHERS & CO., [1891] 2 Q. 3544. —— To name free berth.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that pltf.'s vessel after loading a certain cargo should proceed "to London or Tyne dock to such ready quay berth as ordered by the charterers," "demurrage to be at the rate of £30 per running day," in no case, unless in berth before noon, were the lay-days to count before the day following that on which the vessel was in berth, & the captain or owners were to have an absolute lien on the cargo for all freight & demurrage in respect thereof. The vessel was ordered by the charterers to a certain London dock, but when the vessel arrived at such dock there was no quay berth ready for her, & she was consequently detained one day beyond the time required for discharging her had she been able to have got alongside a quay berth on her arrival in the dock:—Held: the charterers were bound to name such a quay berth as was ready, & for the detention caused by the charterers neglecting to do so pltfs. were entitled to a lien on the cargo for demurrage, the damage for the detention being sufficiently in the nature of demurrage to come within the demurrage clause.—HARRIS v. JACOBS (1885), 15 Q. 3549. —— To name possible place for discharge —Cargo of explosives.]—By a charterparty a ship was to load a cargo, including explosives & machinery, & proceed to certain ports, among others Buenos Ayres (including Boca), & there deliver the cargo in regular turn at the customary discharging places named by the charterers' agents into lighters or alongside the wharf according to the custom of the port; the owners authorised the charterers to sign bills of lading for the cargo as usual, & agreed to abide by all the conditions thereof, & the cargo was to be brought to & taken from alongside at the charterers' risk & expense. By the bill of lading the cargo was to be discharged at the consignees' wharf at Boca, provided the same was available, otherwise lighters were to be provided by the consignees. At Boca a ship carrying explosives was only allowed to discharge at a certain wharf, & the ship therefore could not go to the consignees' wharf (which was available), & the consignees' goods had to be lightered there. In an action by the shipowner against the charterers to recover the expense of lightering:—Held: the shipowner was entitled to recover, either upon the ground that the charterers, when they signed the bill of lading, knew that the explosives were on board & that they could not perform the contract without breaking the port regulations, & were therefore imposing a liability on the shipowner which did not come within the above clause in the charterparty authorising the charterers to sign bills of lading; or upon the ground that the charterers had only the right to direct the ship to go to such discharging places as were customary, & that the customary place at Boca for discharging a ship with explosives was the wharf appointed by the port regulations.—HULL STEAM SHIPPING CO. v. LAMPORT & HOLT (1907), 23 T. The vessel came into collision with a steam tug in the Thames, & was sunk with the cargo on board, but was got up, & on the afternoon of Apr. 23, arrived at a tier at Wapping, whither she was ordered by the harbour-master. Notice of her arrival was on the same day given to the agents of the freighter, & they were required to name a wharf; but they declined to do so. On Apr. 24, the ship & freight were arrested by process out of the Admlty. 3555. —— ——.]—(1) By charterparty it was agreed that pltfs.' steamship should proceed to Cronstadt & load a cargo of wheat, & therewith proceed to a port in the English or Bristol Channel as ordered, "or so near thereto as she may safely get at all times of tide & always afloat & deliver the same. Eight running days, Sundays excepted, to be allowed the merchants, if the ship be not sooner dispatched, for loading & discharging the steamer, & ten days on demurrage if required over & above the laying days at £25 per day." The steamer arrived at Cronstadt, occupied six running days in loading a cargo of 4,325 quarters of wheat, & was ordered to Gloucester, Bristol Channel, for discharge. She arrived at Sharpness Dock in the Bristol Channel on Nov. 13. Sharpness Dock is within the port of Gloucester, & about seventeen miles from the basin within the city of Gloucester, where grain cargoes are usually discharged if the burthen of the ship will admit. The steamer was ready to commence the discharge of her cargo on Nov. 13, but could not get nearer to Gloucester than Sharpness until part of her cargo was first discharged at Sharpness. On Nov. 14 & 15 the consignees discharged into lighters 1,585 quarters of the cargo, & then required the master to take the steamer through the canal to a place of discharge within the basin at Gloucester. The master proceeded, & arrived in the basin on Nov. 17. On Nov. 18 the residue of the cargo was discharged & the vessel returned to Sharpness, where she arrived on Nov. 19. In an action for demurrage evidence was given of a custom of the port of Gloucester, according to which the usual place of discharging grain cargoes was at the basin within the city, & when vessels with grain cargoes destined for Gloucester were of too heavy a burthen to come up the canal they were lightened at Sharpness, & during the discharge at Sharpness of so much of the cargo as it was necessary to discharge in order to enable the vessel to proceed by the canal to Gloucester Basin the lay days counted, but the time occupied by coming up the canal to discharge at Gloucester Basin & by returning to Sharpness was not counted:—Held: the custom was not inconsistent with the express provision in the charterparty as to "running days," & the time occupied by the vessel in going from Sharpness to the basin & in returning to Sharpness ought to be excluded from the lay days, & pltfs. were entitled to one day's demurrage only.

(2) What is the general rule governing the delivery of a cargo? The ship has to go to the port to which she is ordered; but to go to the port is not enough. She has to deliver her cargo at the port to which she is ordered, according to the usual course of delivery at that port of such a cargo as that which she carries. She cannot deliver the cargo at any portion of the port to which she is ordered, at the choice of her owners. They are not obliged to deliver the cargo at any part of the port to which she is ordered, according to the choice of the charterer. Her owners have undertaken to deliver at the port, & not at any particular part of the port at the whim & pleasure of the charterer, or at the whim & pleasure of the ship's owners. But by the construction that is put upon charterparties, her owners are bound, & entitled, to deliver at the port only in one part of the port, namely, at the usual place of delivery at that port of a cargo such as that which she carries. Under these circumstances I have not the slightest doubt that if it were shown that for such cargoes as that which she carries, the usual mode of delivery of a ship was to unload her to one half or to any other proportion at one part of the port, & then, when she was lightened, to go on to another part of the port & there finish unloading, the usual place of delivery at that port would be at both those places. The usual place of delivering a cargo in such a port as that would be to go to the first place & there unload the ship, until she drew a particular draught of water, & then to go to the other place & finish unloading. In such a case as that, the owner of the ship would be bound, & entitled, to deliver the cargo from her in that way, unless some new stipulation had been made between him & the charterer as to the mode of unloading the ship (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

(3) Working days in England, by the custom & habits of the English, if not by their law, do not include Sundays. . . . Working days in an English charterparty, if there is nothing to show a contrary intention, do not include Christmas Day & some other days which are well known to be holidays (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

It is said that the "running days" mean "consecutive days." There is the fallacy of the argument. The meaning may be this, that in the absence of any custom the days of unloading would be consecutive . . . It is not ordinary English to say that "running days" mean "consecutive days" (COTTON, L.J.).—NIELSEN v. WAIT (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 67; 54 L. T. 344; 34 W. R. 33; 2 T. L. R. 34; 5 Asp. M. L. 3558. Right of consignee—To name place for discharge—Within limits assigned in charterparty.]—By the charterparty the ship was to proceed "to Plymouth, not higher than T. or N., or as near thereunto as she can safely get, & deliver" her cargo, with certain lay days & demurrage days. The port of Plymouth is a tidal estuary. On the ship's arrival in Plymouth the consignees ordered her to discharge at B., an ordinary landing place in the port of Plymouth, lower than T. or N. At this time the tides were neap: the vessel went as near to B. as she could in that state of the tide, & lay on the sand for some days, till, the tides being higher, she got to B. In an action for demurrage:—Held: the consignee had the option of naming any ordinary loading place in the port of Plymouth within the limits assigned, & the lay days did not commence till the vessel reached the place so named. The delay in getting to it being occasioned only in the ordinary course of navigation in a tidal harbour.—PARKER v. WINLOW (1857), 7 E. & B. 942; 27 L. J. Q. B. 49; 4 Jur. N. S. 84; 119 E. 3564. Necessity for notice of readiness to discharge.]—BOURNE v. GATLIFF, No. 3695, post.

3565. ——.]—A condition in a bill of lading provided, in effect that on the arrival of the vessel in dock, the consignee of a portion of the cargo should be ready to receive the goods, & that in default, the master or agent of the ship should be at liberty to land the goods & warehouse them at the consignee's risk & expense. The vessel arrived, & the agent of the consignee made an immediate application for the goods, but was told that it was not known in what part of the ship they were. On receiving the same answer on the following day, the agent withdrew, handing to the mate a notice desiring him to give twenty-four hours' notice of his readiness to deliver the goods, in accordance, as the notice alleged, with 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, ss. 66, 67. No such notice of readiness was given, &, there being no one to receive the goods, they were placed in a warehouse by the master of the ship, a charge of £5 17*s.* 3*d.* being thereby incurred. The consignee having threatened to charge his agent with the value of the goods unless he obtained delivery of the same, the agent paid the said sum under protest, & brought this action against the shipowner to recover such sum:—Held: the special contract in the bill of lading excluded the operation of Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act; & the Act did not apply to a case where the shipowner was in bonâ fide ignorance of the position of the goods, regard being had to the premature demand of the agent of the consignee.—OLIVER v. COLVEN (1879), 27 W. 3566. What constitutes readiness to discharge—Pratique not granted.]—By charterparty, a vessel was to have ninety running days, & ten days of demurrage, to commence from her arrival at W., being ready to unload & having received pratique. Declaration for breach of the charterparty stated that, although the vessel, on Aug. 24, was at W. ready to unload, & had received pratique, yet deft. did not, within ninety, etc., commencing on her arrival at W. & being ready to unload & receiving pratique, unload & load the vessel, but wrongfully detained her beyond the running days & days of demurrage. Plea, that the vessel was not ready to unload, & did not receive pratique, for a long time after her arrival at W., viz. for a time equal to that of the alleged wrongful detention: conclusion to the country. Issue thereon. It appeared in evidence that the vessel was ready, & at liberty, to unload at W. on Aug. 14, but had not gone through any form of receiving pratique, there being no quarantine establishment at W., nor any means of formally granting pratique:—Held: the issue on pltf.'s part, affirming that the vessel had received pratique, was sufficiently borne out by the proof; for she must be taken to have received pratique when she was at W. ready, & at liberty, to unload.—BALLEY v. DE ARROYAVE (1838), 7 Ad. & El. 919; 3 Nev. & P. 3567. —— Ship not arrived at berth named by charterer.]—By a charterparty a steamer when loaded with coal was to proceed to a certain port, "& as usual & customary deliver the same always afloat to the order" of the charterers "alongside any store craft steamer depot ship wharf or arsenal. . . . Time for delivery to count when steamer is ready to discharge." There was only one customary place of discharge at the port in question, & when the steamer arrived at the port that place was occupied. In an action for demurrage:—Held: the steamer was not "ready to discharge," & the time for delivery did not therefore commence until she was at the customary place of discharge in the port.

The authorities cited . . . are clear to show that, if by a charterparty it is agreed that a ship shall go to a port & there unload, she must unless otherwise ordered go to the customary place of discharge in that port (COLLINS, J.).—SANDERS v. JENKINS, [1897] 1 Q. B. 93 ; 66 L. J. Q. B. 40 ; 2 Com. Cas. 12.

3568. —— Where time begins at place other than usual discharging place—Readiness to proceed to actual discharging berth—Freedom from customs & quarantine restrictions.]—Where a charterparty or berth contract does not contain any express provisions to name a berth & does not provide for delivery " at a berth as ordered," & the ship arrives at the end of the voyage specified in the charterparty, & is anchored or moored waiting for orders, & is " ready to discharge " in the sense that there is nothing to prevent her being made ready at once, if desired, the lay days commence to run although she is not in a discharging berth.

When the ship's time begins at a place which is not a usual discharging berth, & she cannot be required to discharge at any other place, her obligation to be ready to discharge is fulfilled if she is free from Customs or quarantine restrictions & ready to proceed to her actual discharging berth & to discharge when she reaches it (SCRUTTON, L.J.).—ARMEMENT ADOLF DEPPE v. ROBINSON (JOHN) & CO., LTD., [1917] 2 K. 3570. —— Goods landed before ship reported.]—Goods were shipped from Messina to London, under bills of lading which provided that they should " be received by the consignees . . . immediately after the arrival of steamer, or the same will be warehoused by the agent of the ship at the expense & risk of the owner of the goods." The ship arrived, & before she was reported at the Custom house in accordance with Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (c. 36), the goods, the consignees not being present to receive the same, were landed & warehoused. The practice in the Port of London is that when a Custom house officer is present upon the quay, the permission of the Custom authorities to discharge the cargo before report is assumed by the master, unless such permission is actually refused or the discharge forbidden. The consignees subsequently paid the warehouse charges under protest, & claimed to recover them from the shipowner :—Held : inasmuch as the possibility that the goods would be permitted to be landed before the ship was reported must be taken to have been within the contemplation of the parties at the time the contracts were made, there was an obligation upon the consignees under the bills of lading to be ready to receive the goods before the ship was reported, & therefore they were not entitled to recover the amount of the warehouse charges.—MAJOR & FIELD v. GRANT (1902), 18 T. Had deft. sent to the master of the ship, in Africa, early notice of the assignment, it would have reached him there before Feb. 12, 1858, the day on which the ship actually set sail thence on her homeward voyage. Deft., however, did not send the notice till Jan. 23, 1858, & the notice then sent never reached the master. On Mar. 1, 1858, A. became bkpt. B. Production of Bill of Lading.

3583. Necessity for—General rule.]—(1) Defts., merchants at Hull, chartered pltfs.' ship to sail to Buctouche & there load a cargo of timber, & being so loaded to proceed to Gloucester & deliver the same on being paid freight. Thirty-five running days to be allowed for loading & discharging the cargo, & ten days on demurrage above the laying days at £5 per day. The ship arrived at Buctouche, & the loading was completed at the expiration of twenty-seven of the running days. The master signed bills of lading by which the cargo was deliverable "unto order or to assigns, he or they paying freight for the goods as per charterparty." The invoice of the cargo & bills of lading together with a bill drawn by the shipper on defts. for the price of the cargo was presented to defts. by the shipper's agent in London, but defts. refused to accept the bill or receive the cargo, on the ground that the shipment was not according to the contract. Defts. wrote to the shipper's agent & also to the master of the ship, offering to land the cargo & take care of it on their premises for whom it might concern. The shipper's agent gave notice to the master not to part with the cargo without production of the bill of lading. The vessel was ready to discharge her cargo, according to the charter, on Sept. 5. The lay days expired on Sept. 13. The vessel might have been discharged in five days. The bill of lading was not produced to the master until Sept. 22, & the delivery was completed on Sept. 30:—Held: defts. were liable for demurrage & detention of the vessel.

(2) The master by the bill of lading is liable to the person in whom the property vests. 3597. —— —— ——.]—Goods were shipped under a bill of lading in these terms:—"Shipped in good order & condition by Petrocochino Bros., of Calcutta, in the steamer Zeno, bound for London, sixty-nine bales hides, being marked & numbered as per margin, & to be delivered in the like good order & condition from the ship's deck where the ship's responsibility shall cease, at the aforesaid port of London," etc., "on payment of freight," etc. On her arrival in London the Zeno went into the Victoria Docks, & notice was given to the consignees that she was ready to unload. The custom of the Victoria Docks as to the unloading of steamers was proved to be as follows:—The goods are taken from the deck of the vessel by the co.'s servants, & placed on the dock quay, or, if perishable, under sheds, &, if the consignee or his agent does not appear to claim them within twenty-four hours, they are warehoused by the co. If the consignee or his agent sends a lighter, they are put into the lighter from the quay by the servants of the co. The expenses of landing the goods & putting them into lighters are paid by the shipowner, but, if the goods are warehoused, this is done at the expense of the owner of the goods. Within the proper time the consignees of the sixty-nine bales sent a lighter for them. The whole sixty-nine were proved to have been landed by the co.'s servants & placed on the quay; but the evidence failed to satisfy the jury that more than sixty-eight were put into the lighter. The other bale was never traced:—Held: the shipowner was not responsible for the missing bale.

The vessel was ordered to the Albert Dock. She arrived there at 6 a.m. on a Monday, & the master handed to the dock co., a copy of the manifest of the cargo, together with a request & authority to discharge the cargo, & deliver it to the order of the consignees. As the berths around the dock were occupied, the vessel was moored, under the direction of the dock officials, alongside another steamer, & there remained until she could be hauled into a quay berth at midday on Thursday. It was customary at that dock for the whole of the discharge to be done by the dock co.'s servants at the quay, but owing to the quay being crowded with other cargo, the discharge was not commenced until Saturday, &, the intermediate days being Sunday & Bank Holidays, was not resumed until the following Tuesday. It was completed by 3 a.m. on the Wednesday being the tenth day from the arrival of the vessel in the dock. The discharge under ordinary circumstances, would occupy two days. In an action for demurrage:—Held: defts. were not liable, as the whole operation of the discharge was, by the custom of the dock, carried out by the dock co.'s servants at the quay & pltfs. had failed to make out any breach of the contract to discharge as fast as the ship could deliver.

There is no reference whatever in the charterparty to the custom of the port; but I do not think that the absence of reference to the custom of the port is of any very great importance; because it is obvious that the discharge of a vessel under such a charterparty as this at such a dock must take place in accordance with that which is the usual way of performing that operation (GORELL BARNES, J.).—THE JAEDEREN, [1892] P. 351; 61 L. Special method of unloading—Due to defective condition of ship—Liability of shipowner for additional expense.]—The owner of a homeward bound ship entering the West India Docks in so leaky a condition as to require immediate unloading & assistance, without waiting her turn to be quayed & unloaded in rotation in the import dock, in the manner required by the 39 Geo. 3, c. 69, is bound to bear the extra expenses of labourers for pumping the ship after the crew were discharged, & for delivering the cargo into lighters in the outward dock or basin; also for coopering previous to such delivery into lighters, & for the hire of such lighters; the co. having afterwards unladen the cargo out of such lighters upon the quays in the import dock, & performed the requisite cooperage, etc., upon such unlading, in the same manner as they would have done if the cargo had been delivered out of the ship itself in its proper time & place.—BLACKETT v. SMITH (1810), 12 East, 518; 104 E. 3602. General rule.]—Where a charterparty provides that the ship shall proceed to a certain port, & there, or as near thereto as she can safely get, deliver the cargo in the usual & customary manner, but is silent as to the time to be occupied in the discharge, the contract implied by law is, that each party will use reasonable diligence in performing that part of the delivery which by the custom of the port falls upon him; & there is no implied contract that the discharge shall be performed in the time usually taken at the port.

Where therefore a ship, under such a charterparty, was in the course of unloading at the port of discharge, & owing to a threatened bombardment of the port, the authorities there refused for several days to allow any more of the cargo to be landed, the loss from the delay must fall on the shipowner, & he cannot recover damages from the charterer.

The custom-house authorities will not allow any cargo to be landed except through the customs; & in consequence of their dilatoriness, & the general sluggishness of the population the ordinary discharge of a vessel at Callao is very slow (BLACKBURN, J.).

Delivering cargo is as much the duty of the shipowner as of the merchant, & consequently the contract, implied by the law, in the absence of any stipulation in a charterparty is that each party shall use reasonable diligence in performing his part of the delivery at the port of discharge, the merchant being ready to receive in the usual manner, & the owner by his captain & crew to deliver in the usual manner. So that there is no contract implied by law on the part of the shipowner to allow his vessel to be kept there for the usual time, if by reasonable diligence on the part of the merchant the cargo might be sooner taken away, & no contract implied by law on the part of the merchant to take the cargo out within such usual time, if he could not by reasonable diligence perform it; though very commonly there are stipulations to that effect (BLACKBURN, J.).

The contract which the law implies is only that the merchant & shipowner should each use reasonable dispatch in performing his part (BLACKBURN, J.).—FORD v. COTESWORTH (1868), L. R. 4 Q. 3604. ——.]—A charterparty for the carriage of spars from a port in Norway to London provided that the cargo should be discharged in the Surrey Commercial Docks, the discharging to take place in eight days, the cargo to be taken from alongside at merchants' risk & expense, the ship "to discharge over side in the river or dock into lighters or otherwise if required by consignees":—Held: the charterparty did not impose upon the ship's master & crew the obligation to get the spars outside the ship & into the lighters, & for that purpose to put men on board the lighters; but when they had brought the spars within reach of the consignees' men in the lighters, it was the duty of the latter to take their part in the joint operation of delivering & receiving the goods, & the consignees were liable to pay demurrage for delay caused by reason of their men in the lighters being too few to enable the discharge to be completed within the lay days.

The operation [of discharging cargo], therefore, which is to take eight days is an operation to be performed as between the shipowner & the consignees (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

Wherever the delivery is to be, the shipowner, on the one hand, must give delivery. If he merely puts the goods on the rail of his ship, he does not give delivery; that is not enough. If, on the other hand, the consignee merely stands on the other ship, or on the barge or lighter, or on the quay, & does nothing, he does not take delivery. The shipowner has performed the principal part of his obligation when he has put the goods over the rail of his ship; but I think he must do something more, he must put the goods in such a position that the consignee can take delivery of them (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—PETERSEN v. FREEBODY & CO., [1895] 2 Q. Pltfs. paid to his dependants compensation in accordance with Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58). Pltfs. claimed to recover the sum paid as compensation from defts. on the ground that defts. had impliedly undertaken to indemnify pltfs. for loss or damage occasioned by the discharge of the cargo :—Held : there was no evidence of an implied undertaking by defts. to indemnify pltfs. ; the accident was not the direct or natural consequence of doing the discharging of the cargo, but was a consequence of the manner in which the discharging was done.—CORY & SON, LTD. v. LAMBTON & HETTON COLLIERIES, LTD. 3608. —— —— Receiver to share extra expense of unloading.]—A steamship belonging to pltfs. was chartered to carry a full & complete cargo of lawful merchandise at the option of the berth charterers from Alexandria to London, & she was to be discharged as fast as she could deliver in accordance with the custom of the port. The charterparty provided for demurrage at the rate of £250 per running day. About 500 tons of barley was loaded on board as part of the general cargo, & defts. were the indorsees of the bill of lading in respect of 300 tons. That bill of lading stated that the barley was shipped in good order & condition, & that the cargo was to be received by the consignees as fast as the steamer could deliver in accordance with the custom of the port. All unloading at the Port of London is done under statutory authority by the Port of London Authority who provide the necessary machinery & employ all the men. The work done by the men in the hold is on behalf of the ship, but the operations subsequent to the grain being elevated from the hold is on behalf of the receivers. The ordinary method at the Port of London for discharging grain in bulk is by employing pneumatic suction pumps. The barley loaded at Alexandria contained a quantity of sand & stones, with the result that the suction pump became choked & the discharge was thereby delayed for a day & a half. The men working on the discharge also demanded & received extra payment owing to the condition of the barley, but defts. were not required to assent to the extra payment. The Port of London Authority demanded from pltfs. & received payment for the extra cost of the discharge in respect of men & machinery. Pltfs. claimed to recover from defts. demurrage in respect of the day & a half during which the ship was delayed owing to the condition of the barley, alleging that it was an implied term of the contract under which the barley was shipped that it should be capable of being handled & unloaded expeditiously & effectively by the machinery & appliances in ordinary use at the port of discharge. Pltfs. also claimed to recover from defts. a proportion of the extra charges in connection with the discharge which they had been obliged to pay the Port of London Authority :—Held : (1) no warranty that the barley was capable of being handled & unloaded expeditiously & effectively by the machinery & appliances in ordinary use at the port of discharge could be implied, & therefore pltfs. were not entitled to recover in respect of the extra time taken in the discharge ; (2) pltfs. were entitled to recover from defts. a portion of the extra charges incurred in respect of the discharge, because a request by defts. to pltfs. to assent to the increased charges on behalf of defts. must be implied in law.—TRANSOCEANICA SOCIETA ITALIANA DI NAVIGAZIONE v. SHIPTON (H. ### C. Duties Apart from Stipulation.

(a) Duties of Shipowner.

3609. Delivery over side of ship.] — A cargo was shipped under a bill of lading incorporating a clause in the charterparty which fixed the number of lay days for unloading & allowed other days for demurrage. Neither the bill of lading nor the charterparty contained any exception of strikes. By the custom of the port of discharge a cargo, such as that to be unloaded was discharged by the joint act of the shipowner & the consignees. During the lay days a strike took place, both among the labourers employed on behalf of the ship & those employed by the consignees, with the result that the unloading ceased, & could not be resumed till some days after the expiration of the lay days :—Held : as the number of lay days was fixed, the consignees were liable to pay demurrage, notwithstanding the inability of the shipowners, owing to the strike, to do their part in the unloading.

Speaking generally of all contracts, a breach is excused where the party committing the breach has been prevented by the other side from carrying out his contract. Here the condition is that the cargo should be out of the ship in a certain number of days ; & if the shipowner, by any act of his, has prevented the discharge then, though the freighter's contract is broken, he is excused. It is said in this case that the delivery of the cargo is the joint act of the shipowner & the consignee, & that, if so, the shipowner has not fulfilled his part, & so has prevented the performance of the contract of the consignee. The delivery of a cargo is undoubtedly the joint act of the shipowner & the merchant freighter ; but naturally it is open to the parties to regulate the share in the discharge to be taken by either of them. In this case, the share to be taken has been regulated by custom, & the merchant freighter has not to begin his part, as is usually the case, when the cargo is brought to the rail of the ship. Such a course in the case of grain in bulk would be inconvenient, & so the merchant freighter supplies sacks, & loads the grain in the hold ; & then the shipowner resumes his ordinary duty, which is delivery over the ship's side. Now, has the shipowner failed in this duty through any default of his own, or of persons for whom he is responsible ? The persons for whom he is responsible are the persons who represent him in his absence. If, for instance, the master refused to discharge the cargo, the owner would be responsible (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

The non-delivery, in fact, was occasioned, by something which defts. could not foresee, & by the act of persons over whom they had no control. It was caused by the act of the workmen employed by the stevedore, & by their breach of contract

PART VII. SECT. 7, SUB-SECT. 5.—C. (a).

o. Expenses of discharge — Work done by labourers in pursuance of obligation to give delivery.]—Bills of lading provided that cargo was to be "delivered within reach of vessel's tackles." By means of the vessel's hoisting tackles, trays holding cargo were lowered on to a wharf. The trays were supplied by the ship's stevedore. On the wharf, labourers freed the trays from the tackles so far as was necessary, & handed the goods to the consignee's lorry drivers :—

with their employers. The shipowner had no control over these workmen, & is not responsible for the consequences of their acts, & consequently there there is nothing to relieve the consignees from the absolute contract to pay demurrage (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

The contract was to discharge the ship in a certain number of days, according to the terms of the charterparty; & there was a further stipulation that the charterer was to take the risk of unloading the cargo from alongside the ship. This stipulation is in terms unconditional, & it has frequently been called an absolute contract, by which I understand an unconditional contract.

I agree that there is an implied term in the contract, & that is, that the shipowner shall not prevent the freighter from performing his part of the contract; & if it is shown that this has happened, the freighter is discharged (LINDLEY, J.). —BUDGETT & Co. v. BINNINGTON & Co., [1891] 1 Q. The agent of deft., the charterer, told the master that the consignors would require the hay to be delivered at a particular wharf in Deptford Creek, & that he should proceed there on his arrival in London, which he promised to do. On arriving in the Thames, he was informed that by an Order in Council made under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1869 (c. 70), it was illegal to land in Great Britain hay brought from France. The Order in Council was in existence when the charterparty was entered into, but neither of the parties knew of it, nor did the shipowner contemplate any violation of the law. Deft. after a time exported the hay & the shipowner brought an action against him to recover damages in respect of the detention of the ship:—Held: under these circumstances, deft. could not set up as a defence that the voyage was an illegal voyage.

The performance by receiving the cargo alongside in the river without landing it at all was both legal & practicable (BLACKBURN, J.).—WAUGH v. MORRIS (1873), L. R. 8 Q. B. 202; 42 L. J. Q. B. 57; 28 L. T. 265; 21 W. R. 438; 1 Asp. M. L. C. 573.

In the autumn of 1921 the vessel carried a full load of pit props from Finland to West Hartlepool according to defts.' order. Under the charterparty the cargo was "to be brought to & taken from alongside the steamer at the charterers' risk & expense, as customary." The cargo was discharged direct into railway wagons at quayside & a sum of £509 16*s.* 7*d.* was paid by defts. to the stevedores for the work of discharge. This sum of £509 16*s.* 7*d.* was debited to pltfs.' account with defts., & the amount finally due to the shipowners was agreed in an account stated between the parties & had been paid. 3628. —— Discharge into "craft"— What vessels included.]—Pltfs. agreed to carry in their steamer a cargo of wood from Savannah to London, for delivery to defts.' agents. The bill of lading incorporated the London clause A., which was in the following terms: "The shipowners shall at their option be entitled to land the goods on the quays or to discharge them into craft hired by them immediately on arrival & at consignee's risk & expense. . . ." Clause 3 of the bill of lading provided (inter alia): "The carrier shall have the liberty to convey goods in lighters to & from the ship at the risk of the owners of the goods. . . ." Clause 5 of the bill of lading provided that "the steamer shall be entitled to commence discharging immediately on arrival. The goods shall be taken from the ship's tackle directly on their coming to hand in discharging the ship; otherwise the master or ship's agent shall be at liberty to enter & land the goods, or put them into store warehouse or craft, or on quay, at the receiver's risk & expense; & shall have a lien on such goods until the payment of all costs & charges so incurred." Notice of the arrival of the vessel was sent to defts. &, no application having been made by them for delivery, pltfs. decided to discharge the goods, &, as they could not obtain more than one lighter, they hired four sailing barges in which to store the goods, there being no warehouse room available: —Held: as lighters were not available pltfs. were justified in using sailing barges & were entitled to recover from defts. the extra expense caused thereby.—UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD v. VIGERS BROTHERS (1924), 41 T. 3632. Delivery "ex ship"—Goods taken into warehouse for dispatching to railway—Whether delivery in accordance with contract.]—Pltfs. directed defts., the owners of a line of steamships which were carrying certain goods for delivery to pltfs., to "deliver ex ship to the railway co. to our order." The contract contained a clause protecting defts. from liability for damage to goods by fire. On arrival the goods were not taken direct to the railway station, but were placed in defts.' warehouse adjoining the quay. Here a fire broke out, & the goods were destroyed. Pltfs. brought an action for breach of contract & duty in handling the goods, contending that, in view of the instructions sent to defts., the goods should never have been put into the warehouse, & that, as they had been so dealt with, defts. were liable for their loss & could not avail themselves of the protection afforded by the terms of the contract:—Held: the expression "ex ship" did not exclude the taking of goods into warehouse for the purpose of dispatching them by cart to a railway, & in this case, the removal of the goods into the warehouse being justifiable, defts. were entitled to avail themselves of the protection afforded by the contract.—ESSEX COUNTIES FARMERS' CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCN., LTD. v. NEWHOUSE & CO., LTD. 3633. "Steamer shall be entitled to commence discharging immediately after arrival"—Whether implied undertaking that facilities could be available.]—Parcels of timber consigned to defts. were carried on board pltfs.' ship under bills of lading containing the following clause: "Steamer shall be entitled to commence discharging immediately after arrival . . . either into lighters or other craft or at the quay . . . & discharge continuously, day & night, also on Sunday from all hatches simultaneously, without intermission, all at the discretion of the master. . . . The goods shall be taken from the ship's tackle by the consignee of goods directly on their coming to hand. . . . If consignees fail to receive as above stated, & no facilities are available for discharging into craft or on wharf without delay to steamer, receivers shall pay . . . demurrage, at a fixed rate. The master's certificate shall be conclusive & binding both as to the extent of the delay . . . & the amount payable by consignees hereunder in respect of such delay. . . ." On arrival at the port of discharge no deep water berth was available, &, owing to the dimensions of the timber, discharge into lighters was impossible. The discharge accordingly was effected by delivery of the timber overside into the water, where it was received by defts.' agents, formed into rafts, & removed. No delay avoidable by defts. occurred in the discharge.

The master certified that £2,792 was due from defts. in respect of six days' demurrage, & in the certificate attributed the delay to there being no vacant berth alongside the quay & no lighter available:—Held: (1) the words "steamer shall be entitled to commence discharging," etc., merely conferred a right, power of liberty upon the shipowners & did not imply an undertaking by the consignees that facilities would be available for the exercise of the right; (2) the goods were "taken from the ship's tackle directly on their coming to hand" in the business sense of those words; (3) the delay assessed by the master was not delay which he was empowered by the bills of lading to certify for demurrage, & that accordingly the certificate was not binding.—THE COAHOMA COUNTY, [1924] P. 95; 93 L. F. "Consignee's Risk and Expense."

3635. Effect of insertion of clause—Whether provision for customary method of discharge excluded.]—By charterparty between pltfs., shipowners, & defts., charterers, it was agreed that pltfs.' steamer should load a cargo of deals for defts. "The cargo to be brought to & taken from alongside the ship at merchant's risk & expense, where she can lie always afloat & safe" . . . "& being so loaded shall therewith proceed to Yarmouth, Norfolk, or so near thereunto as she may safely get, & deliver the same always afloat. . . ." The following clause was in writing: "The cargo to be supplied as fast as steamer can load & stow same, & discharged as fast as steamer can deliver & according to the custom of the respective ports. . . ." On arrival at Great Yarmouth the vessel was moored 15 feet from the quay edge, which was as near to the port as the vessel could lie always afloat, & in consequence 9*d*. per standard extra cost was incurred in the discharge. In an action by pltfs. to recover this amount, the judge gave judgment for defts., holding, that the written prevailed over the printed clause, & he admitted evidence of a custom that the shipowner must deliver on the quay; &, therefore, bear the extra cost of the discharge between the ship's rail & the quay. He also admitted telegrams & letters alleged to indicate the intention of the parties as to the construction of the contract:—Held: that judgment must be reversed on the ground that the evidence as to the custom was improperly admitted, as the two clauses were not inconsistent, the clause as to the cargo being 'taken from alongside the ship at merchant's risk & expense" dealing with the cost of the discharge, whilst the clause as to delivery, "according to the custom" dealt with the time & mode of the discharge.

I am asked to strike out the words "at merchant's risk & expense." It is said you must do so, because there are the words in writing, "& according to the custom of the respective ports." I read those words as meaning the mode of loading or unloading, or it may be as to where the goods are to be delivered; but that does not contradict that part of the contract which is staring one in the face, namely, that the taking to & from ship's rail is at merchant's expense (A. In the course of her voyage the ship was wrecked near Key West; all the cotton was more or less damaged; some of it was lost, & some was so damaged that it had to be sold at Key West. The rest of the cotton was conveyed in another vessel to Liverpool. The marks on a very large number of the bales were so obliterated by sea water that none of the cotton lost or sold at Key West, & a portion only of that carried to Liverpool, could be identified as belonging to any particular consignee. Two only of pltfs.' 43 bales were identified, & these were delivered to pltfs. :—Held : in respect of the cotton lost, & that sold at Key West, there was a total loss of a part of each owner's cotton, & all the owners became tenants in common of the cotton which arrived at Liverpool, & could not be identified ; the share of each owner's loss in the cotton totally lost or sold at Key West, & his share in the remainder which arrived at Liverpool being in the proportion that the quantity shipped by him bore to the whole quantity shipped according to the rule in cases of general average where it is not known whose goods are sacrificed : &, consequently, there was no total loss, either actual or constructive of pltf.'s 41 bales.—SPENCE v. UNION MARINE INSURANCE CO., LTD. 3643. —— —— Shipowner's liability for non-delivery.]—Bales of cotton were shipped by several shippers upon a general ship for carriage to Liverpool, the bills of lading being similar. Upon arrival it was found that the number of bales landed fell short of those shipped, & that some of the landed bales could not be identified, their marks having been obliterated. These latter bales were sold & their proceeds distributed proportionately among the several consignees. Sixteen holders of bills of lading, nine being shippers & seven consignees, joined in one action against the shipowners claiming damages for non-delivery of the number of bales specified in their bills of lading respectively.

When the bales became unidentifiable, the several owners of cotton became, in point of law, owners in common of them in proportion to their respective interests, & the shipowner could only attribute such proportion in answer to any claim for non-delivery (LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN). —SMURTHWAITE v. HANNAY, [1894] A. 3644. —— —— ——.]—Bales of jute consigned to various consignees & specifically marked were shipped under bills of lading stating that the bales were received " marked & numbered as per margin," that the number of packages signed for was to be binding on the shipowner unless error or fraud be proved, but that the ship was not to be liable for " obliteration or absence of marks." On the discharge of the ship fourteen bales were missing & eleven bales forming part of the cargo shipped at the port of loading, were not marked as labelled in the bills of lading & could not be identified as belonging to any particular consignment. All the consignees received their full consignments except four, who refused to accept any of the eleven bales. In an action for freight by the shipowner against one of the four consignees, who had received six bales less than his full consignment, the consignee counterclaimed for shortage. The shipowner was willing to account to the four consignees for the value of the fourteen missing bales in proportion to their respective shortages, but claimed that the eleven bales ought to be allocated amongst them in the like proportion :—Held : as the shipowner had failed to deliver the full number of bales shipped, he was not entitled to claim that the non-delivery of any of the six bales was due to obliteration or absence of marks, & that he was liable for the full value of the six bales.—SANDEMAN & SONS v. TYZACK & BRANFOOT S.S. i. In General.

3666. General rule.]—(1) The duty of providing, & making proper use of, sufficient means for the discharge of a cargo, when a ship which has been chartered arrives at its destination, & is ready to discharge, lies upon the charterer. But that general duty may be qualified by words in the charterparty, & by the circumstances of the case. If, by the terms of the charterparty the charterer has agreed to discharge the ship within a fixed period of time, that is an absolute & unconditional engagement, for the non-performance of which he is answerable, whatever may be the nature of the impediments which prevent him from performing it. If there is no fixed time, the law implies an agreement, on his part, to discharge the cargo within a reasonable time. When the covenant merely engages that the merchant shall with all dispatch, according to the custom of the port, unload the vessel, he will fulfil his contract if he employs all the usual methods of dispatch at the port.

A charterparty was entered into by which a vessel was to take on board a cargo of steel rails & fastenings, & proceed therewith to the port of East London in South Africa. In the charterparty was this stipulation: "The cargo is to be discharged with all dispatch according to the custom of the port." The discharge of such a cargo could only be effected there by a warp & lighters. These were under the absolute control of a co., to which the governmental authorities had transferred all their powers. The co. allowed vessels the use of the warp & lighters in turn, making no exception in favour of any vessel except mail steamers, which on arriving were provided for to the exclusion of other vessels, whether of the Govt. or of private individuals. The ship arrived at the port, found a great number of vessels, there, the number of lighters was insufficient, & the ship could not obtain its "turn" until more than thirty-one working days had elapsed after its arrival. There was no delay attributable to the master or crew except what was thus occasioned by the custom of the port: —Held: in this case the shipowner was not entitled to maintain an action against the charterer for demurrage

There is no doubt that the duty of providing, & making proper use of, sufficient means for the discharge of cargo . . . lies, generally, upon the charterer. If, by the terms, of the charterparty, he has agreed to discharge it within a fixed period of time that is an absolute & unconditional engagement, for the non-performance of which he is answerable. . . . If, on the other hand, there is no fixed time, the law implies an agreement on his [the charterer's] part to discharge the cargo within a reasonable time. . . Difficult questions may sometimes arise as to the circumstances which ought to be taken into consideration in determining what time is reasonable. If, as in the present case, an obligation, indefinite as to time, is qualified or partially defined by express or implied reference to the custom or practice of a particular port, every impediment arising from or out of that custom or practice, which the charterer could not have evercome by the use of any reasonable diligence, ought, I think, to be taken into consideration (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

A charterparty in which there are stipulations as to loading or discharging cargo in a port, is always to be construed as made with reference to the custom of the port of loading or discharge, as the case may be (LORD BLACKBURN).

(2) There is an absolute contract on his [the charterer's] part to furnish a cargo & he is bound to pay damages if it becomes impracticable to do so (LORD BLACKBURN).—POSTLETHWAITE v. FREELAND (1880), 5 App. Cas. 599; 49 L. J. Q. B. 630; 42 L. T. 845; 28 W. R. 833; 4 Asp. M. L. C. 302, H. L.

3668. ——.]—A ship was chartered to proceed to Archangel & load a cargo of timber & thereafter to proceed with the cargo to Ayr. The charterparty provided that the cargo was to be loaded & discharged at the rate of not less that 100 standards per day, whether berth available or not, "always provided the steamer can load & discharge at this rate," & that, in the event of the steamer being detained beyond the time stipulated as above for loading & discharging, demurrage should be paid at £70 per day & pro rata for any part thereof. The ship duly arrived at Ayr, & if the discharge had been carried out at the stipulated rate it would have been completed in six & one-third days, but owing to a shortage of labour at the port it occupied thirteen & one-third days. The shipowner claimed seven days' demurrage:—Held: (1) the general rule established by the authorities was that if the charterer had agreed to load or unload within a fixed period of time he was answerable for the non-performance of that agreement, whatever the nature of the impediments, unless they were covered by exceptions in the charterparty, or arose through the fault of the shipowner or those for whom he was responsible, & this rule applied to a case where the time was to be ascertained by reference to the rate of discharge; (2) the proviso in the charterparty had reference to the structural capacity & equipment of the ship & did not apply to a shortage of labour.—ALEXANDER (WILLIAM) & SONS v. AKT. Bad weather.]—By a charterparty for a voyage with a cargo of timber from Pensacola to a safe port in the United Kingdom "sixteen working days were to be allowed the merchants for loading the ship at Pensacola, & to be discharged at such wharf or dock as the charterers may direct, always afloat, in fourteen like days, & ten days on demurrage over & above the said lying days at £10 per day."

The ship was ordered to M., & arrived at the usual place of discharge in the river & began unloading. It was the duty of the master to put the timber over the ship's side, & form it into rafts, & the charterer was to send tugs & take the rafts away. During the unloading bad weather came on, & though the ship did not leave her anchorage, the rafts could not be formed, & the charterer therefore could not do his part in taking the timber away. The bad weather caused a delay of four days in discharging the ship. An action having been brought by the shipowner against the charterer for the four days demurrage:—Held: where a given number of days is allowed to the charterer for unloading, a contract is implied on his part that, from the time when the ship is at the usual place of discharge, he will take the risk of any ordinary vicissitudes which may occur to prevent his releasing the ship at the expiration of the lay days; & deft., therefore, was liable for the four days demurrage.—THIIS v. BYERS (1876), 1 Q. 3682. Different bills of lading imposing unequal obligations—Some consignees having more onerous obligations—Whether discharged from liability.]—A steamer loaded a general cargo at Gothenburg for London. The most part of the cargo was loaded under bills of lading which contained two clauses; the first clause provided that the cargo should be discharged at the rate of so many tons or standards a day & that demurrage should be at a certain rate a day to be paid by consignees in a certain proportion to the freight of the whole cargo; the second clause provided that time for discharging should begin to run twenty-four hours after the ship's arrival in a certain roadstead, whether a berth was available or not. A portion of the cargo was loaded under bills of lading from which the second clause had been struck out. Another portion was part of a consignment which had been shipped under a bill of lading on another steamer & had been transhipped on the steamer in question without any further bill of lading. The steamer arrived in the roadstead but was unable to find a berth for eleven days. Those bills of lading which contained the two clauses imposed on their holders liability for their proportion of thirty-three days' demurrage. The bills of lading from which clause 2 had been struck out imposed liability for a proportion of twenty-two days' demurrage. The bill of lading which comprised the transhipped portion provided for demurrage at a lower rate than that fixed by the others:—Held: a shipowner by giving bills of lading imposing upon consignees unequal obligations in relation to discharge & demurrage does not as a matter of law prevent those consignees who are under the more onerous obligations from performing those obligations, & there was in the circumstances no implied condition that all the bills of lading should be in the same terms.—UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD v. DURRELL (R.) & CO., [1923] 2 K. The giving of a longer time to another bill of lading holder does not of itself constitute a prevention by the shipowner of the performance of his contract by the bill of lading holder who has contracted to discharge in the shorter time; & the latter can only escape liability under his contract if he can show that by some act on the part of the shipowner he has been in fact prevented from carrying out his contract.—UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD v. DURRELL & CO., LTD., SAME v. DUFFELL & CO. If he wrongfully refuses to give over the goods, or if by reason of any default of his or of any obstacle for which he is responsible the consignee is unable to get his goods, this would afford a good answer to the claim, & this is the substance of the defence which is pleaded. . . . Now, the only thing which prevented the delivery in the present case was the inability of the master to get at the goods, because they were stowed at the bottom of the hold, & because the owners of the super-incumbent goods had neglected to take those goods away in proper time. Can this neglect of the other consignees be said to be the default of the master? If not, it is immaterial whose fault it was; for defts. undertook that, whether they were able to get away their

The contract was for eighty-five running or lay days for the loading & discharge of the cargo, & fourteen days on demurrage: breaches, non-payment of demurrage for the fourteen days, & that defts. detained the vessel in unloading for eight further days. Second plea, that defts. did not keep or detain, in manner & form, etc. Third, that, at the time when the vessel was unloading, pltfs. wrongfully stopped the unloading. It appeared that the unloading was stopped, by the influence of ptlfs., for thirteen days: deducting these, the whole number of working days occupied in loading & unloading amounted to ninety; including them, to one hundred & three:—Held: on the second plea, it was a question for the jury whether defts. were not discharged of their liability by the interference of the pltfs.—BENSON v. BLUNT (1841), 1 Q. Defts. below pleaded that the goods were put on board under a bill of lading, by which they were deliverable to pltf. below or his assigns on payment of freight; that, after the arrival of the vessel at London with the goods on board, deft. below caused them to be unshipped & safely & securely landed & deposited in & upon a certain wharf called Fenning's Wharf, at the port of London, there to remain until they could be delivered to pltf. below or his assigns according to the tenor & effect of the bill of lading, the said wharf being a place at which goods conveyed in steam vessels from Dublin to London were used & accustomed to be landed & deposited for the use of the consignees thereof, & a place fit & proper for such purpose; & that afterwards, & whilst the goods remained & were deposited upon the said wharf for the purposes aforesaid, & before a reasonable time for delivery thereof according to the tenor & effect of the bill of lading had elapsed, the goods were there destroyed by an accidental fire, & that, after the arrival of the vessel at London with the goods on board, defts. below were ready & willing to deliver the same to pltf. below or his assigns according to their promise, but that neither pltf. below or his assigns was or were there ready to receive the same, whereupon defts. below caused the goods to be unshipped & landed on Fenning's Wharf, there to

(2) When a man is called upon by a contract to do an act, & no time is specified, he is allowed a reasonable time for doing it; & what is a reasonable time may depend on all the circumstances of the case. But here the word used being "immediately," it implies that there is a more stringent requisition than what is ordinarily implied in the word "reasonable," but still it must receive a reasonable interpretation, so far that it cannot be considered as imposing an obligation to do what is impossible (COCKBURN, C.J.).—ALEXIADI v. ROBINSON (1861), 2 F. & F. 679, N. P.

3698. —— ——.]—(1) Apart from custom or special contract, the shipowner is not bound to give notice to consignee of the arrival of ships; but the consignee is bound, within a reasonable time after the arrival, to be ready to remove & receive his goods, & in default of his so doing, the shipowner may land them, & demand wharfage or other proper charges for landing.

(2) The general principle is that when the goods are sent, with a bill of lading or without, the shipowner has a right to expect from the consignee of the goods reasonable diligence to inquire after the arrival of the ship (COCKBURN, C.J.).

(3) It is for the jury to say whether any such custom [to give the consignee notice either of arrival or expected arrival in the Newcastle trade] has been established; . . . it must not be a mere occasional practice, but a practice binding upon all; it must not be limited, but must be universal & general, & applicable to every consignee. . . . A carrier by land or sea is only bound, apart from special contract or custom or course of dealing, to take the goods to the place or port to which he goes. . . . It is the duty of the consignee, apart from special custom or contract, to use due & reasonable diligence to discover when the ship arrives with his goods on board. Of course, he cannot be expected to have his lighters always lying in the river ready to receive goods coming from abroad, but he is entitled to a reasonable time after the ship has arrived (COCKBURN, C.J.).—HOULDER v. GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO. (1862), 3 F. & F. 170, N. P.

i. In General.

3710. No reasonable time in abstract.]—Where a bill of lading is silent as to the time within which the consignee is to discharge the ship's cargo, his obligation is to discharge within a reasonable time. That obligation is performed if he discharges the cargo within a time which is reasonable under the existing circumstances, assuming that those circumstances, in so far as they involve delay, are not caused or contributed to by him.

A cargo was shipped for the port of London under bills of lading which did not specify the time within which the consignees were to take discharge of it. Upon the arrival of the ship in the dock the dock co., as agents for the consignees, began to unload the cargo. The unloading was interrupted for several days by a strike of the dock labourers which delayed the discharge far beyond the time which would otherwise have sufficed. Throughout the time during which the discharge ceased & the dock co. were unable to supply labour to effect it, it was not possible for the consignees either to find any other person to provide the labour or themselves to obtain the necessary labour in any other way:—Held: the consignees were not liable in damages to the shipowner for the delay.

If the terms of the bills of lading had required the discharge to be effected in any particular number of days, it is quite clear that the burden of the delay caused by the difficulty of obtaining labour would have fallen upon them, & it would have been no answer to a charge that they had failed to fulfil their obligation, to say that the circumstances had rendered it impossible for them to do so. The bills of lading in the present case contained no such stipulation, &, therefore, in accordance with ordinary & well known principles the obligation of resps. was that they should take discharge of the cargo within a reasonable time. . . . There is of course no such thing as a reasonable time in the abstract. It must always depend upon circumstances. . . . The only sound principle is that the "reasonable time" should depend on the circumstances which actually exist. . . .

It is true that in the case of Postlethwaite v. Freeland, No. 3666, ante, the point which has now to be determined did not directly arise, inasmuch as in that case the charterparty contained the stipulation that the cargo was to be discharged with all despatch according to the custom of the port, & I cannot agree . . . that this was necessarily the same as the implied obligation to discharge within a reasonable time. . . . The circumstances which prevented the vessel being discharged within the ordinary time were not beyond the control of defts. It was not shown that they could not by reasonable precautions or exertions have procured the necessary lighters elsewhere or earlier, & so have avoided the delay which took place (LORD HERSCHELL, C.).—HICK v. RAYMOND & REID, [1893] A. According to the custom of the port, the discharge was carried out by the dock co., & it was delayed for four days in consequence of a strike among the dock labourers. ii. Natural Conditions of Port.

3726. General rule.]—Defts. chartered pltf.'s vessel, the C., for a voyage to the port of L. The charterparty provided that the cargo was "to be brought to & taken from alongside free of expense & risk to the ship"; but it contained no other clause as to discharging the cargo. The number of lighters at L. was small, & when the C. arrived, the port was crowded with vessels, about half of which belonged to defts. or had been consigned to them. Seventy-two days elapsed after the arrival of the C. before her discharge was completed by defts.' agents; but the number of days upon which the cargo was unloaded was only thirty-four. The delay arose from the lighters being engaged in discharging the other vessels lying at the port:—Held: in determining whether the terms of the charterparty had been broken by defts., the delay occasioned by the lighters being engaged in discharging other vessels was not to be taken into account.

I will proceed to consider what circumstances will entitle the charterer to allowances for delay. I apprehend that he will be entitled to an allowance if any difficulty arises from the natural or physical peculiarities of the port, such as that the ship is obliged to lie at some considerable distance from the land, or that while the wind is blowing from certain points of the compass ships cannot be unloaded into lighters; he may be entitled to an allowance also if after a ship has been partly unloaded in deep water, she is brought into shallower water for the more convenient discharge of her cargo; whether the unloading can go on during the change of berth is a question of fact upon which the jury must give their opinion. I think also that allowance must be made for any holidays usually observed at the port, & during which no work is done (COTTON, L.J.).

For the purpose of ascertaining what is a reasonable time defts. are not entitled to excuse delay, which would be otherwise inexcusable, by alleging that they had sent so many vessels to the port that the number of lighters which they had engaged did not enable them to unload pltf.'s ship within what would otherwise have been a reasonable time. It was the duty of defts. to provide sufficient appliances for unloading pltf.'s ship (COTTON, L.J.).

The charterer must have them [appliances] ready, either when the ship arrives or within a short time, such as a day or a couple of days, after her arrival (COTTON, L.J.).—WRIGHT v. NEW ZEALAND SHIPPING CO., LTD. (1878), 4 Ex. D. 165, n.; 40 L. T. 413; 4 Asp. M. L. C. 118, C. A.

3729. —— Dock regulations as to order of discharge.]—Under a charterparty defts., in fulfilment of a contract for the sale of Spanish ore, shipped a cargo of ore on board a steamship, to be delivered at Maryport, as customary, where & as directed by consignee. At Maryport, by the harbour regulations, consignees having one vessel already discharging for them cannot have another vessel berthed to discharge for them if a vessel of any other consignee is awaiting a berth. Defts., on the arrival of the ship, had four other vessels chartered by them, with cargoes of ore for the same purchasers, who were treated by the harbour authorities as the consignees awaiting a berth, & many vessels for other consignees were also waiting. The ship was consequently unable to get a berth for twenty days after arrival:—Held: the delay was not the fault of the charterers, & where, under such a charterparty, the delay complained of is such as ought to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time of the contract, the shipowner has no cause of action against the charterer.

It is good law that if the performance of a contract is rendered impossible by the act of one of the parties to it the other party is excused; & it is also good law that if one of the parties unduly delays the performance by the other he forfeits his own right to complain of the delay, & probably also renders himself liable to make good any damage the other may suffer by the delay. But these rules must be applied with reference to the circumstances of each case, & must be read with reasonable limitations. Thus, if it appears that the delay complained of was such as both parties ought to have contemplated when the contract was entered into, then no complaint can be based upon it (BIGHAM, J.).—HARROWING v. DUPRÉ (1902), 18 T. 3731. ——.]—A ship was chartered by a co. running a regular line to proceed from Calcutta to New York, & she was in accordance with the charterparty consigned to agents nominated by the charterers. The ship was to discharge her cargo as fast as she could put out & according to the custom of the port. The bills of lading, which were in the American & Indian Line form, contained the following clause: "Customs formalities & detentions at New York to be at the risk & expense of consignee of goods." According to the law of the United States, goods cannot be removed from a ship until the customs examination has taken place & the duty paid, but if the ship belongs to a regular line the cargo may be unloaded on to a wharf, where the customs formalities must be complied with. On the arrival of the ship at New York, she discharged on to a wharf & the cargo was tiered, expenses being thereby incurred for wharf hire, watching cargo, & for breaking down cargo for customs examination. Delivery of the cargo from the wharf was not completed until seven days after the ship had left the wharf. The ship was not discharged as fast as she could put out to the extent of five days, owing to compliance with customs formalities. The agents took no steps to enforce against the consignees any claim for expenses, charges, demurrage, or detention caused by compliance with customs formalities. The charterers assumed full responsibility for the acts of the agents:—Held: (1) the clause "Customs formalities & detentions at New York to be at the risk & expense of consignee of goods" meant that the consignees of goods could make no claim against the ship in respect of charges & delays caused by compliance with Customs formalities, & each consignee was required to pay the charges which naturally appertained to his parcel of goods, but he was not liable to pay any part of the general charges for wharf hire, tiering, or breaking down; the term "detention" referred to the detention of the goods & not of the ship &, therefore, the five days' detention of the ship was not an "expense" within the meaning of that clause; (2) in the absence of specific instruction to the agents to assert a lien there was no breach of duty on the part of the agents in abstaining from asserting a lien or from bringing a number of actions against the consignees.—COBRIDGE S.S. The discharge was to be effected by the receiver's stevedore, the steamer paying so much per fathom; but, by the custom of the port, the harbour authority discharged the cargo, & some delay occurred. In an action for demurrage brought by the shipowner against the charterer:—Held: the charterer was not liable for delay due to circumstances beyond his control, that is to say, he was not responsible for the acts of an authority who was not his servant or agent, or was no more his agent than that of the shipowner.

It has been laid down . . . that a provision like the one in this charterparty requires the customary steamship despatch in discharging "having regard to the custom of the port, the facilities for delivery possessed by the particular vessel under contract of affreightment, & all other circumstances in existence . . . attending the discharge of this particular cargo, not being circumstances brought about by the person whose duty it is to take delivery, or circumstances within his control." The custom at the port of Cardiff was to discharge such a cargo into the waggons of certain railways that had access to the quay. The charterers arranged with one of these railways for the supply of waggons to take the cargo. Without any negligence on their part, but owing to stress of work at the port, by reason of which there was a deficiency in the number of waggons available, the discharge of the ship was delayed. In an action against the charterers for the detention of the ship:—Held: the charterers having done their best to procure the appliances that were customarily used at the port for discharging such a ship, & having used them with proper dispatch, were not liable for the delay.

I am myself inclined to think that it matters not . . . whether the words "as customary" are in the contract or not, for if not they would be implied (SMITH, L.J.).

3746. —— Duty to use utmost dispatch practicable.]—A clause in a charterparty providing that the cargo is to be discharged with customary steamship dispatch as fast as the steamer can deliver during the ordinary working hours of the port of discharge, but according to the custom of the port, is not tantamount to fixing a definite number of days or hours during which the discharge is to be completed. To create such a liability the days or hours must be specified in plain terms. This construction of the clause is not affected by a special exception in the case of a strike, a lock-out or epidemics. Demurrage is not due if the discharge is effected with the utmost dispatch practicable, having regard to the custom of the port, the facilities for delivery, & all other circumstances not brought about by or within the control of the person whose duty it is to take delivery.

By charterparty it was agreed that a steamer should proceed to a named port, & there deliver a cargo of timber "to be discharged with customary steamship dispatch, as fast as the steamer can deliver . . . according to the custom of the port," with an exception in respect of delay caused by a strike or lock-out. The ship duly arrived at the port, & was ready to deliver the cargo, but delivery was delayed by the crowded state of the dock to which she was ordered. There was evidence that she could not have been discharged more quickly, under the circumstances, elsewhere in the port, & that the consignees had used all reasonable means to procure the discharge:—Held: they had performed their obligation under the charterparty, & were not liable for demurrage.—HULTHEN v. STEWART & Co., [1903] A. 3747. —— —— Whether consignee liable for circumstances beyond control.]—A ship was chartered to load wood cargo at a Swedish port for delivery at Hull, Victoria or Albert Dock as ordered, & by the charterparty the cargo was to be discharged with customary steamship dispatch as fast as steamer can deliver but according to the custom of the port, & in the event of the detention of the ship beyond the time stipulated as above demurrage was payable at a daily rate. By the custom of the port of Hull it was the duty of the receiver of a wood cargo to arrange for the steamship, on or before her arrival in dock, a vacant available & suitable berth to which she could forthwith proceed, & also to provide a clear quay space &/or a sufficient & continuous supply of bogies. Shortly before the arrival of the ship at Hull the cargo was consigned in three parcels to three firms of timber merchants at Hull by indorsement of the bills of lading, which incorporated the conditions of the charterparty. The ship was ordered by the charterer to the Victoria Dock without any communication with the receivers or any of them. Owing to the congestion of traffic at the dock the ship had to wait several days for a vacant berth & the receivers were unable to provide either a clear quay space or a sufficient & continuous supply of bogies, which were under the control of the dock owners, & as a consequence the ship took eleven days longer to discharge than she would have done if there had been continuous dispatch. Upon a claim for demurrage by the shipowner against the receivers the trial judge found that the detention of the ship was due to causes beyond the control of the receivers:—Held: under a charterparty in the above form the consignees, &, owing to scarcity of labour, due mainly to the war, the consignees were unable to obtain extra men in sufficient numbers to enable them to receive the cargo as fast as the vessel could deliver it. In an action against them for demurrage in respect of the delay thus occasioned:—Held: the consignees were not liable in demurrage in respect that their obligation under the bill of lading was not an absolute obligation to receive the cargo as fast as the vessel could deliver, but only an obligation to use all reasonable dispatch in receiving it

3754. Congested state of port—Crowded docks.]—If by the bill of lading of a cargo of brandy brought into the London Docks, no time is stipulated within which it shall be unloaded, the implied contract on the part of the consignee, is to discharge the ship in the usual & customary time for unloading such a cargo which is the time within which the brandies can be unloaded in the docks into the bonded warehouses. Therefore, the consignee is not, under these circumstances, liable to make compensation to the owner of the ship, in the nature of demurrage, for any delay occasioned by the crowded state of the London Docks, although the cargo might have been landed sooner? if the duties had been immediately paid.

The law could only use an implied promise . . . to discharge the ship in the usual & customary time for unloading such a cargo. That has been rightly held to be the time within which a vessel can be unloaded in her turn, into bonded warehouses (MANSFIELD, C.J.).—BURMESTER v. HODGSON (1810), 2 Camp. 488; 170 E. R. 1228, N. 3757. —— Ultimate discharge in unusual place.]—A charterer sold a cargo of pit props to G. The charterparty provided that freight was to be paid at Barry, at 25*s.* all per cubic fathom delivered as ascertained in the customary manner at place of discharge; the cargo to be supplied to & received from the steamer in the manner & at the rate customary at such port during customary working hours, & a further ten days on demurrage; owner to have absolute lien for freight. G. gave notice to the dock co. at Barry to secure a berth for the ship, according to custom, but, eventually, he declined to accept the cargo as it was in excess of what he had purchased, & cancelled his notice. When the ship arrived at Barry, on June 26, all the berths, where it was customary for cargoes of pit props to be discharged, were occupied, but a piece of land which had never been used before for the discharge of pit props was cleared, & the ship reached a berth on July 4 & commenced discharging, part of the freight having been paid in advance. As the balance of the freight was not paid, the discharge was stopped on July 7, & negotiations ensued. The captain was advised by his solr. that he could not safely land the cargo subject to the ship's lien under 1894 Act, ss. 493, 494. There was considerable confusion as to who were the persons entitled to receive the cargo. Payment of the freight was promised but not made, & eventually, on July 15, the cargo was discharged subject to the ship's lien under 1894 Act, ss. 493, 494. The discharge was completed on July 21; in the ordinary course of events the discharge would have been completed on July 13. Defts. were subsequently appointed agents of the charterers, & it was agreed that they were to be treated for the purposes of legal proceedings as indorsees of the bill of lading at the time of the arrival of the ship & at all material times thereafter. In an action for demurrage:—Held: (1) although there was a breach of contract on the part of defts. in not giving the customary notice to provide a berth for the ship, yet, as in fact pltfs. suffered no damage through the default of defts., since delivery according to the custom of the port was impossible till July 5, the damages must be nominal; (2) under the special circumstances of the case, having regard to the confused condition of the parties entitled to receive the cargo, & to the advice given to the captain by his solr., the Sundays . . . any time lost by reason of . . . strikes, lockouts, or combinations of workmen—whether partial or general—not to count as part of the . . . discharging time. . . . If, through any fault of the merchants or charterers, the vessel be longer detained, demurrage to be paid at the (agreed) rate. . . . The usual custom of the wood trade of each port to be observed by each party in cases where not special expressed." The customary mode of discharging timber at Sharpness is into lighters, by which the timber is taken up the canal to Gloucester, but when the vessel arrived on a Wednesday at Sharpness there were no lighters available, owing to a strike in the port of Gloucester amongst the labourers in the timber trade, who discharged the lighters there, so that the timber lighters were waiting at Gloucester to be unloaded. The strike at Gloucester came to an end on the Friday. On Saturday the discharge commenced, & was completed by noon on the following Tuesday week, that is, on the eleventh day (excluding Sundays) after the vessel's arrival. According to the customary steamer despatch the discharge would have occupied four & a half days. Pltfs. sued defts. in the county ct. for five days twenty-two hours' demurrage. The county ct. judge found that, after the strike came to an end, defts., with the exception of one day, on which they were in default, did all that could reasonably be expected to discharge the vessel, & gave judgment for pltfs. for £22 5*s*. 10*d*., one day's demurrage. Pltfs. appealed:—Held: defts. were not responsible beyond the one day, as the parties contemplated the customary mode of discharge, which was by lighters, & the discharge in that manner was delayed by the strike within the meaning of the charter-party.—THE ALNE HOLME, [1893] P. 173; 62 L. SUB-SECT. 8.—LANDING AND WAREHOUSING CARGO.

A. Apart from Statutory Provisions.

(a) Power to Land and Warehouse.

3780. General nature of power.]—(1) A bill of lading remains in force until there has been a complete delivery of the goods thereunder to a person having a right to receive them, & is not spent or exhausted by the landing & warehousing of them at a sufferance wharf, at all events so long as they are under stop for freight.

A. was indorsee of a bill of lading, drawn in a set of three, making cotton deliverable in London on payment of freight, the cotton had been lately landed, under an entry made by A. at a sufferance wharf in the port of London, with a stop thereon for freight; on Mar. 4 A. obtained from M. an advance of £2,500 on the deposit of two copies of the bill of lading, M. assuming the third to be in the hands of the master. On Mar. 6, the stop for freight being then removed, A. who had in Feb. instructed B., a broker, to take samples of the cotton & to offer it for sale, obtained from B. an advance of £2,000 on the deposit of the third copy of the bill of lading, which A. had fraudulently retained. On Mar. 11, B., being informed of the prior advance by M., sent his copy of the bill of lading to the wharf, & procured the cotton to be transferred into his own name, & afterwards sold it & received the proceeds:—Held: the bill of lading, when deposited with M., retained its full force & effect; there was therefore a valid pledge of the cotton to M.; & he could maintain an action against B., either for the proceeds of the sale, as money received to his use, or for wrongful conversion of the cotton.

The wharfinger under these circumstances was, at the lowest, the common agent for the shipowner & for the consignee or holder of the bill of lading, agent for the consignee or holder, upon his producing the bill of lading showing that he was entitled to the goods, & upon his paying the freight, to transfer the goods into his name, & to deliver them to him or give him a warrant for them, & agent for the shipowner, to retain possession of the goods, & to permit no one to exercise any control over them until the claim for freight had been satisfied (WILLES, J.).

(2) What would have been the master's duty? He might have kept the goods on board the vessel on demurrage, at all events for a reasonable time; thus using the ship as a warehouse. That was found to be exceedingly inconvenient, & led to frequent disputes between the shipowner & the consignee. But another course was open to the master. Having obtained a new employment for his vessel, he would be unwilling that she should be used as a mere warehouse, especially as the demurrage he might recover would often be no sufficient compensation for the detention in an inconvenient & perhaps an expensive port; & the law gave him the alternative of landing & warehousing the goods, giving notice to the consignee that they were at his disposal on payment of the freight, & having an action for the charges. That also was very inconvenient; for, although the shipowner's liability as a carrier would be thus got rid of, he would incur a new liability as a warehouseman. It was inconvenient & unjust that the master should be forced to abandon his lien, or incur a chance of litigation in his new capacity of warehouseman, with all its dangers & risks. Accordingly, we find that a series of Acts of Parliament has been passed for the purpose of relieving the master from that difficulty.

The Act of 1862 substantially gives the master the same powers, with some extension, which he had under the local Acts, & powers very similar to those given to him under a variety of foreign codes. Where the holder of the bill of lading presents himself, but is not ready to pay the freight, the master is entitled to secure himself by putting the goods into a warehouse. If there be any dispute or delay in the adjustment or payment of the freight, such dispute is to be settled in the way pointed out by the Act. But, until the freight is paid, or the course so pointed out is pursued, the master still has a hold upon the goods for purposes contemplated in the bill of lading (WILLES, J.).—MEYERSTEIN v. BARBER (1866), L. (2) The master of a ship, after waiting a reason-

PART VII. SECT. 7, SUB-SECT. 8.—A. (a).

3782 i. When power arises—After waiting reasonable time.]—Where goods are conveyed under a bill of lading to be delivered in good order & condition, upon payment of freight & the ship has arrived & taken up her moorings, & the master is ready to deliver the goods to the consignee according to his contract, but the latter is unwilling to pay the freight & receive them, the master may, after reasonable time, land the goods, & if they are so landed on a convenient & accustomed wharf, at a convenient hour in good order & condition, ready for delivery to the able time at a foreign port, & no person having produced the bill of lading, may deliver the goods to some person to keep till the bill of lading is produced.

A declaration stated that deft., a shipowner, received on board thirty casks of cochineal, shipped by R. to Bombay; that the master delivered bills of lading to R., & that deft. undertook to deliver to the order of R. or assigns; that by the custom of merchants the goods were deliverable to a bonâ fide assign of the bill, on production; that R. assigned the bills to pltf. as security for moneys due; that pltf. was bonâ fide assign, & that it was deft.'s duty to deliver to pltf. Breach, that deft. delivered to other persons, not bonâ fide holders. Plea, that R. was agent for M. D. & co. at Bombay, & pltf. was a broker; that R. had an order from M. D. & co.; that pltf. was agent for R. to purchase, & did purchase the goods, & sent the invoice to R., & that R. sent a notice & copy of the invoice to M. D. & co.; that the bill of lading was delivered to pltf. as agent of R.; that pltf. did not deliver or send the bill to R. or to M. D. & co.; that pltf. fraudulently procured R. to indorse the bill to pltf. to secure a debt; that the ship remained at Bombay four months, & no holder producing the bill, the master delivered to M. D. & co., who produced the invoice & letter of advice:—Held: the declaration was bad as a declaration in case; also it was substantially bad as a declaration in trover for not averring property in pltf., or a conversion.—HOWARD v. SHEPHERD (1850), 9 C. The contract contained a clause protecting defts. from liability for damage to the goods by fire whilst (inter alia) being warehoused. The goods, on arrival at the quay, were placed in defts.' warehouse adjoining thereto, & were destroyed by fire. In an action by pltfs. for damages for loss of the goods:—Held: on the facts, the removal of the goods to defts.' warehouse was justifiable, &, consequently, they were protected by the exceptions clause contained in the contract.—ESSEX COUNTIES FARMERS' CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCN., LTD. v. NEWHOUSE & CO., LTD. 3785. Duration of power—Consignee offering to receive when part cargo landed.]—By proviso in a bill of lading, simultaneously with the ship being ready to unload the whole or any part of the goods, forty pipes of lemon juice, the consignee was bound to be ready to receive the same from the ship's side; & in default the master or agent of the ship was authorised to enter the goods at the custom house, & land, warehouse, or place them in lighters at the risk & expense of the consignee. After part of the goods had been landed by the shipowner, but not before, the consignee was ready & offered to receive the remainder, but the shipowner refused to deliver them to him, & landed them himself:—Held: the contract was divisible; & unless the shipowner had been prejudiced in the delivery of the remainder, by the default of the consignee in not being ready to receive the whole, he was bound to deliver them. Semble: Merchant Shipping Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 67, Articles 5, 7, should be similarly construed.—WILSON v. LONDON, ITALIAN, & ADRIATIC STEAM NAVIGATION CO. 3786. Whether power divests shipowner of other remedies.]—In an action by shipowner against receivers of cargo for damages for detention of his vessel, a county ct. judge gave judgment for defts. on the ground that the stipulation in the bill of lading that the goods were "to be taken from the ship by the consignees at their expense immediately after their arrival, & as fast as steamer can deliver or the same will be transhipped into lighters, or landed, or warehoused at the expense & risk of the proprietors of such goods," divested the shipowner of any other remedy than that of landing or lightering the goods:—Held: the shipowner had an option, so that he was not deprived of his ordinary remedy by not exercising the power of landing or lightering the goods; &, further, the shipowner was entitled to judgment, as the receivers of the cargo had failed to show that they had done their best in the actual circumstances to make the appliances of the port available.

Pltfs. showed, without contradiction, what the capacity of their steamer was, & then it was shown further that the delay arose from dearth of wagons. That, I think, made out a primâ facie case in favour of pltfs. (JEUNE, P.).—THE ARNE, [1904] P. 154; 73 L. J. P. 34; 90 L. T. 517; 20 T. L. R. 221; 9 Asp. M. L. C. 565, D. C.

3790. Act does not vary mode of delivery—Under contract.]—Goods were shipped under a bill of lading at Calcutta to be delivered in like good order & condition from the ship's tackles (where the ship's responsibility shall cease) at the port of London, etc. On arrival in the Port of London the consignee demanded overside delivery into lighters immediately from the ship's tackles. The shipowner landed them on the dock wharf, & was ready to deliver them thence into the consignee's lighters, but the consignee carted them away, thereby becoming liable to & paying certain dock charges. In an action by the consignee against the shipowner to recover the amount so paid, the jury found that there was a custom for steamships having a general cargo (deft.'s ship's being such) coming into the port of London, & using the docks, to discharge the goods on the quay & thence into lighters:—Held: the custom found was not inconsistent with the terms of the bill of lading, & the shipowner was entitled to discharge the goods on the quay & was not liable for the charges sought to be recovered.

The Act [M. S. Act, 1862 (c. 63)] provides that, as long as the consignee is present & ready to take delivery, delivery shall be made to him, but otherwise the shipowner may land the goods himself; but there is nothing in the sect. of the Act [sect. 7] which has been relied on to oblige the shipowner to deliver to a consignee, who is ready to take delivery, in any way he may please & in a manner opposed to the custom of the port at which the vessel may be (BRETT, M.R.).—MARZETTI v. SMITH & Co. 3792. Option on master to adopt statutory powers.]—(1) In an action by pltf., the shipowner, against the consignees of the cargo for delay in unloading the ship it appeared that defts. were consignees under a bill of lading which imposed no express limit of time within which the goods were to be unloaded, but contained a stipulation that the goods were to be applied for within twenty-four hours after the ship's arrival, otherwise the master of the ship might himself unload at the expense of the consignees, & should have a lien on the goods for all freight & expenses. The ship arrived in the port of discharge, & defts. duly applied for the goods & commenced to unload them; but a strike of the dock labourers occurred, & the unloading was delayed for about a month, & was then completed by defts. Both pltf. & defts. did all they could under the circumstances to expedite the unloading of the ship:—Held: the bill of lading containing no stipulation as to the time within which the cargo was to be discharged, defts. were entitled to a reasonable time, & in the absence of any special provision on the subject the reasonableness of the time for unloading must be considered with reference to the circumstances which existed at the time of unloading; & as the strike could not be attributed to any default on the part of defts., they were not liable for the delay.

3800. Right to delivery of goods—Upon deposit of amount of freight—Goods not landed under the statutory provisions.]—Certain goods were shipped at Antwerp on board the steamship H. owned by defts., the C. co., consigned to pltfs. at Southampton under a bill of lading which provided (inter alia) as follows: "The goods to be taken from alongside by the consignees as soon as the vessel is ready to discharge . . . or otherwise they may be landed, put into lighters, or stored . . . at the expense of the consignee of the goods. . . .

Freight to be paid at destination before delivery. . . . The co. shall have a lien upon the goods for the payment thereof, as well as a general lien, not only for the freight of the same, but for all other freights, storages, or other charges owing to the co. by the shipper, consignee, or owners." The vessel arrived at Southampton, & was ready to discharge, but pltfs. did not take delivery. The goods were landed by the master of the H. & stored with a warehouseman, with instructions that the goods were to be held for the shipowners, & not to be delivered to any person without their instructions, which were to be accompanied by their release, for the freight. The bill of lading was sent by pltfs. to the warehouseman with the sum due for freight as under 1894 Act, ss. 493–496. The warehouseman, acting upon the instructions of the shipowners that the goods were not to be delivered to pltfs. until payment of freight to the shipowners had been made, refused to deliver the goods. In an action by pltfs. for the delivery of the goods on payment of freight to the warehouseman :—Held : as the shipowners had not landed the goods & stored them in the warehouse under the provisions of 1894 Act, the consignees had no right to delivery of the goods by the warehouseman on depositing the amount due for freight.—DENNIS & SONS, LTD. v. CORK S.S. 3801. Deposit of amount of freight—No evidence of personal liability—By person taking delivery—Delivery taken as agent.]—Where cargo is deposited by a shipowner with a warehouseman under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, ss. 62–72, now 1894 Act, ss. 492–496, subject to a stop for freight, & the consignee deposits the freight with the warehouseman & takes delivery of the goods from him, no contract by the consignee to be personally liable for the freight is to be inferred from his acceptance of the goods, & the Act creates no such personal liability. In these circumstances a consignee, who is so named in the bills of lading, but who has no property in the goods & takes delivery only as agent for the owner, cannot be sued for the freight.

Upon payment of the amount claimed, therefore, by applts. to the dock co., the lien of the shipowner ceased. The shipowner brought an action against the consignees for a declaration of title to the money so deposited, & an order for payment of it to him :—Held : there was jurisdiction under R. S. 3804. Failure to make entry of imported goods—Notice of readiness to deliver.]—By Merchant Shipping (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 67, a shipowner is empowered to land goods imported in his ship from foreign parts subject to the condition, that " if before the goods are landed the owner thereof has made entry for the landing & warehousing thereof at any particular wharf other than that at which the ship is discharging, & has offered & been ready to take delivery thereof, & the shipowner has failed to make such delivery, & has also failed at the time of such offer to give the owner of the goods correct information of the time at which such goods can be delivered, then the shipowner shall, before landing or unshipping such goods under the power hereby given to him, give to the owner of the goods twenty-four hours' notice in writing of his readiness to deliver the goods, & shall, if he lands or unships the same without such notice, do so at his own risk & expense " :—Held : (1) the owner of the goods when he makes an offer to take delivery of them must be in a condition to receive the same if the offer be then accepted in order to entitle him to the benefit of such condition ; (2) when such offer was made, the shipowner, if he then failed not only to make delivery of the goods, but also to give such owner of the goods information of the time at which they could be delivered, was bound to give the twenty-four hours' notice above specified before he landed the goods, although he was never asked to give such information.—BERRESFORD v. MONTGOMERIE (1861), 17 C. 3806. —— Statutory provisions as to failure to make entry not applicable.]—When goods are landed under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 67, (6), sub-sect. 7 does not apply, for the latter refers only to the discharging of cargo overside, & not to the landing of it for the purposes of assortment on the wharf, & the written notice referred to in sub-sect. 7 applies, therefore, to cases arising under that sub-sect. only. It is the duty of the owner of the goods who receives either a written or verbal notice that he can have them to take them away within a reasonable time, & that whether sub-sect. 6 or sub-sect. 7 applies to the case. Notice to the lightermen employed by the owner of the goods is notice to the owner himself.

A ship arrived in dock with a general cargo on Dec. 12, & began to unload on the quay on Dec. 13.

Sect. 7.—The unloading: Sub-sect. 8, B. (d); sub-sect. 9, A. & B. (a) & (b).]

Pltfs., owners of some of the goods, sent a lighterman & barge to receive their portion of the cargo on Dec. 13. It was not then ready. On Dec. 14, the lighterman again attended, but could obtain no information. On Dec. 14, the firm of lightermen wrote to defts., the shipowners, stating they had made application for the goods & inclosing a notice requiring twenty-four hours' notice of defts.' readiness to deliver the goods, & stating that they would not be responsible for any landing charges. On Dec. 15 the landing of the cargo was completed, & the lighterman was that day verbally informed he could have the goods on the morning of Dec. 15. He did not attend, & the goods were not taken away till Dec. 29. Pltfs. paid the dock charges under protest, & brought an action to recover them back:—Held: they could not recover them.

Defts. allege that the cargo was discharged according to the custom of the port of London with regard to the discharge of vessels in dock, viz., by the cargo being unloaded by the dock co.'s servants, & by them landed upon the dock quay, & sorted ready for removal by the parties entitled to take delivery of goods from the vessel . . . the alleged custom was not established by the evidence (HANNEN, P.).—THE CLAN MACDONALD (1883), 8 P. 3811. Action on original bill of lading—Bill of lading altered on voyage—To meet necessity of deviation.]—Pltf. shipped eight bales of cloth, each above the value of £20, for carriage by a steamer belonging to deft. co. from London to Odessa under a bill of lading which excepted liability on the part of the co. for goods above the value of £20 per package, unless the value was therein declared & extra freight paid. Pltf. did not declare the value of the goods or pay the extra freight. The bill of lading (clause 2) reserved to the co. liberty for the steamer, before or after proceeding towards her port of discharge, to proceed to any port or ports whatsoever, although in a contrary direction, in any order, for any purpose whatsoever, & such ports were to be deemed included in the intended voyage, & it provided (clause 4) that in case the whole or part of the goods specified therein were not from any cause, including negligence on the part of the co.'s servants, found for delivery, or it was inconvenient for the ship's purposes to deliver during the vessel's delay at their port of destination, the co. was only bound to forward them to the port of destination from any subsequent port by any other steamer, either belonging to the co. or to other persons, & proceeding either directly or indirectly to such port, such carriage to be at the co.'s expense but at the merchant's risk. The contemplated voyage was to Constantinople & thence to the Black Sea ports, including Odessa. On the arrival of the ship at Constantinople in Apr. 1919, it appeared that Odessa was likely to be captured forthwith by the Soviet forces, & accordingly it was agreed between the respective agents of pltf. & deft. co., that the destination of five of the bales should be changed from Odessa to Batoum & that the remaining three should be discharged at Constantinople, either then or on the ship's return voyage. They were not then discharged, & the ship proceeded to Batoum & back by Novorossisk to Constantinople. The five bales consigned to Batoum remained on board after the ship had left that port. The three which were to have been brought back to Constantinople were landed at Novorossisk for no explained reason & were detained by deft. co.'s agents for two months.

The freight was paid in advance, & the amount was insured. The charterers sold the goods to pltfs. at a price covering cost, freight, & insurance. The cargo was lost by the negligence of defts. In action for the loss of the goods:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to recover as part of the damages sustained by them the amount of the advanced freight, which was included in the price paid by them for the goods, for the insurers of the freight who had indemnified pltfs. were entitled to be subrogated to the rights of pltfs. in respect of the advanced freight, & to have the action maintained for their benefit to the amount insured, as it would, but for the insurance, have formed part of the damages to which pltfs. would have been entitled.—DUFOURCET v. BISHOP (1886), 18 Q. The steamer sailed on July 12; was lost through the negligence of her master on July 19; the loss was known on July 21; on July 26 the charterer paid four-fifths of the freight to the shipowner. In an action by the charterer against the shipowner to recover damages for breach of contract:—Held: notwithstanding the clause "steamer lost or not lost" the charterer was entitled to take into account & recover the advance freight so paid, & the premiums of insurance, in addition to the prime cost of the goods.—TURNBULL v. GREAT EASTERN & PENINSULAR NAVIGATION CO. 3816. —— With sum for estimated profit—Where no market for goods.]—(1) Pltfs. chartered deft.'s ship for carriage of a cargo of cotton seed from Alexandria to the United Kingdom. The charterparty provided that the master was to sign bill of lading at any rate of freight & as customary at port of lading without prejudice to the stipulation of the charterparty. There was also a cesser of liability clause. A cargo was shipped under the charterparty at Alexandria by & on account of the charterers, & a bill of lading was given containing an exception, which was not in the charterparty, protecting the shipowners from liability for damage arising from any act, neglect, or default of the pilot, master, or mariners. The cargo was lost by the negligence of the master. In an action for non-delivery of the cargo, the jury found that there was no special custom at Alexandria with regard to the form of bill of lading in use there:—Held: whether such finding were right or wrong, the terms of the charterparty did not authorise the giving of a bill of lading containing the before-mentioned exception; &, even if they did, in the absence of express provision to the contrary, as between the shipowners & the charterers only, the charterparty could be regarded as constituting the contract, & the bill of lading must be looked on as a mere receipt for the goods; &, consequently, defts. were liable for non-delivery of the cargo. (2) Pltfs. having sold the cargo "to arrive," at a price less than the market value of the goods at the port of discharge at the time when the cargo should have arrived:—Held: in estimating the damages such market value must be looked to, & not the price at which pltfs. had sold the cargo. The charterparty provided that sufficient cash for ship's disbursements should be advanced, if required, to the captain by the charterers on account of freight subject to insurance only.

There is the question as to the amount of the damages. . . . If there is no market for such goods, the result must be arrived at by an estimate, by taking the cost of the goods to the shipper & adding to that the estimated profit he would make at the port of destination If there is a market there is no occasion to have recourse to such a mode of estimating the value; the value will be the market value when the goods ought to have arrived. But the value is to be taken independently of any circumstances peculiar to pltf. . . . It is admitted that, if pltfs. had sold the goods for more than the market value before their arrival, they could not recover on the basis of that price, but would be confined to the market price, because the circumstance that they had so sold the goods . . . would be an accidental circumstance as between themselves & the shipowners (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

3820. Cost of replacement at port of discharge—& interest until judgment.]—Pltfs. delivered to deft.'s servants on a quay at Glasgow, for shipment on board deft.'s vessel which lay alongside, several cases containing machinery, which was intended for the erection of a saw mill at Vancouver's Island. The master gave a bill of lading for them, describing the cases as containing "merchandise." Deft. knew generally of what the shipment consisted. On the arrival of the vessel at her destination, one of the cases, which contained machinery, without which the mill could not be erected, could not be found on board, & pltfs. were obliged to send to England to replace the lost articles:—Held: (1) deft. was liable for the loss of the machinery, as delivery to deft.'s servants alongside the vessel was equivalent to a delivery on board; (2) the measure of damages for the breach of contract was the cost of replacing the lost articles in Vancouver's Island, with interest at 5 per cent. upon the amount until judgment, by way of compensation for the delay.

It is not necessary, in order to render a shipowner liable for the loss of the goods of a shipper, that the goods should have been actually delivered on board the ship.

In the absence of notice of the consequences which will ensue from a part of goods shipped being lost, & of any contract express or implied to be answerable for such consequences, the shipper of such goods, on a part thereof being lost, is, over & beyond the sum necessary to replace it, only entitled as for the delay to receive interest on the said sum till payment, even though the rest of the goods have been rendered useless till the portion lost was replaced.—BRITISH COLUMBIA SAW-MILL CO. v. NETTLESHIP (1868), L. 3821. Goods subsequently delivered by another ship—Fall in value at port of discharge.]—Deft., the master of a vessel in the cotton trade, signed a bill of lading for four hundred bales of cotton said to be shipped on board that vessel, then lying in a port of the United States & bound for Liverpool. The bill of lading was indorsed over to pltfs., who carried on their business in Liverpool. When the vessel arrived at Liverpool, on Oct. 26, 1885, she was found to have on board only 165 bales of cotton; & deft. informed pltfs. that another ship would arrive in a few days with the remainder of the bales. The second ship with 235 bales arrived on Oct. 29. Pltfs. accepted the bales of cotton on board both ships. The price of cotton fell between Oct. 26 & Oct. 29, 1885. Pltfs. afterwards brought an action in the county ct. at Liverpool against the master of the vessel to recover, on the ground of non-delivery of the 400 bales of cotton, the fall in the market price between Oct. 26 & Oct. 29, 1885. The county ct. judge gave judgment for pltfs. for the amount claimed. Deft. appealed:—Held: the county ct. judge was right, & pltfs. were entitled to recover the loss caused by the fall in the value of the cargo as damages for non-delivery.—SMITH, EDWARDS & CO. v. TREGARTHEN (1887), 56 L. They knew at the time of entering into the contract that the coal was required by pltfs. for manufacturing gas at Monte Video, & accordingly carried the coal there, but by mistake delivered a smaller quantity of steam coal to pltfs., who, there being no market for the supply of gas coal, used the steam coal in order to keep their works going, with the result that the steam coal was of considerably less value to them than the gas coal contracted for:—Held: pltfs. in the circumstances acted reasonably in making use of the steam coal & were entitled to recover the loss of the value of the gas coal to them for the purpose of manufacturing gas & by-products, such as coke, tar, etc.—MONTE VIDEO GAS & DRY DOCK

3826. Error in apportioning goods.]—Bills of lading for undivided portions of a bulk cargo of grain contained the following clause & note in margin: "If the parcel herein signed for constitutes part of a larger bulk shipped without separation into parcels, as per bills of lading, each bill of lading shall bear its due proportion of shortage or damage &/or sweepings, if any."

"Part of a parcel, shipped without separation. Each bill of lading to bear its proportion of shortage & damage, if any."

By an error in apportioning damaged grain one consignee received a full consignment of sound grain. One of the other consignees, refusing to accept more than his proportionate share of damaged grain, received a consignment which was 108 quarters short. In an action for short delivery:—Held: the error was caused by the consignees' agents, & the clause in the bills of lading cast no duty on the shipowner to apportion the good & unsound grain.—GRANGE & CO. v. TAYLOR (1904), 90 L. One bill of lading came into the hands of B., who handed it to M., & M. advanced £5,057 16*s.* 4*d.* upon it. M. received less than the quantity of barley covered by his bill of lading, as the holders of the other bills took delivery first from the agents of H., & he called upon B. to make good the deficiency, which he did by making certain payments & delivering some barley. M. sold the barley, & rendered B. an account showing a balance remaining due on the transaction from B. of £12 1*s.* 9*d.* Afterwards B. failed, owing M. some £1,651:—Held: as between M. & H., M. had the full property in the barley covered by his bill of lading, & H. had been guilty of a conversion, but M. could only recover £12 1*s.* 9*d.* as damages.—MONTGOMERY v. HUTCHINS (1905), 94 L. 3835. —— Partnership in freight—Demurrage clause collateral to partnership.]—Pltf., having chartered a steamer, agreed with defts. to take out some engines in her to Barcelona, it being known to both parties that the engines could not be shipped unless some alterations were made in her hatchways. The agreement contained (inter alia) the following condition. (b) That she should not be required to lie on her berth longer than ten days.

The steamer was put on her berth at Liverpool, &, by consent of her owner, the beams in her hatchways were removed, for the stowage of the engines, at the joint expense of pltf. & defts. The engines, which exceeded 20 cwt. in weight, were then brought alongside; & it was found, before ten days had expired, that they would not go down the hatchways, notwithstanding the removal of the beams. The consent of the shipowner to the further widening of the hatchways was thereupon obtained, on condition that the ship should, before sailing, be made right, to the satisfaction of Lloyd's surveyor. In consequence of the necessary delay for widening the hatchways & making the ship thus right, she lay on her berth thirteen days beyond the stipulated ten. Pltf. having brought this action, on the second clause of the agreement, for demurrage in respect of the detention by defts. of the ship on her berth beyond ten days:—Held: defts. were liable on that clause, it being collateral to & independent of any partnership in the freight; assuming that the agreement constituted a partnership to some extent between the parties in that respect.—BLECH v. BALLERAS (1860), 3 E. & E. 203; 29 L. Fifty running days were allowed by the charterparty for loading & unloading, & ten for demurrage, at £10 a day. 3844. Party to whom delivery order given.]—A charterparty contained a clause that pltf.s' ship should load a complete cargo at T. & then proceed to London or Tyne Dock "to such ready quay berth as ordered by charterers," & there deliver to the affreighters or assigns; demurrage to be at the rate of £30 per running day. On arrival of the ship at the Millwall Docks, London, a delay occurred by reason of there being no quay berth ready to receive her. She discharged part of the cargo into lighters, & the remainder when she got into a quay berth. Pltfs. claimed a lien on the cargo in respect of such delay, & deposited the cargo with the dock co., with notice not to deliver the same until payment of the amount claimed. Defts., who were the owners of the cargo by virtue of certain delivery orders from the charterers or their assigns, claimed delivery of the cargo, & having paid to the co. the amount claimed by pltfs., gave the co. notice not to part with the same as they disputed pltf.s' lien:—Held: defts. were liable for the amount claimed, as the word "ready" was introduced into the charterparty for the protection of pltfs. & defts. were in the same position as the charterers, who under the charterparty were bound to name a quay berth to receive the ship as soon as she was ready to proceed there.—HARRIS v. JACOBS (1885), 15 Q. 3849. —— Under colliery guarantee—Not incorporated in charterparty.]—(1) A "cesser clause" in a charterparty applies not merely to liability for demurrage, but to liability incurred through detention in the nature of demurrage.

(2) A clean bill of lading is a bill of lading which contains nothing in the margin qualifying the words in the bill of lading itself.

(3) It was agreed by charterparty between pltfs., the owners of a steamship, & defts. the charterers, that the ship should proceed to C. & there "load in the usual & customary manner a cargo of coals," & proceed to T. "The vessel to be loaded as customary, but subject in all respects to the colliery guarantee, in 108 colliery working hours." The cargo was to be unloaded at a specified rate per day, "or charterers to pay demurrage at the rate of 30*s.* per hour." The master was to sign "clean bills of lading without alteration as presented by charterers." "The charterers' liability under this charter party to cease on the cargo being loaded & the advance freight paid, the owners having a lien on the cargo for the balance of the freight & demurrage." By a colliery guarantee, the proprietors of the colliery undertook to load the ship for defts. in 108 hours. "Demurrage, if any, to be at the rate of 20*s.* per hour." The vessel was not loaded in 108 colliery working hours. In an action for damages for demurrage, or in the alternative for detaining the vessel an unreasonable time at the port of loading:—Held: defts. were not liable, as the "cesser clause" in the charterparty covered the claim made by pltfs.

(4) Semble, the owners of the ship have no right of action against the charterers under the colliery guarantee unless the guarantee is incorporated with the charterparty; but by the custom of the trade, the owners of the ship have such a right of action against the colliery proprietors.—RESTITUTION S.S. ordered by charterers, & there load in the usual & customary manner a full & complete cargo of coals," the vessel to "be loaded at the rate of 100 tons per working day, loading not to commence before July 1." It was estimated that the time necessary to load the vessel would be twenty-three days. B. indicated a certain dock to which the vessel was to proceed; at this dock B. employed a coal agent who was engaged in a large business there in loading ships. By a rule of the dock only three ships in charge of one agent could be admitted into the dock at one time for the purposes of loading; the loading was usually performed by the coals being "tipped" on board the vessel by means of a "tip" or spout, but on some occasions the coal was conveyed on board within the dock by lighters. T.'s vessel arrived outside the dock for the purpose of taking the cargo on board on July 3, but on that day B.'s agent had already, not only the three ships he was entitled to have inside the dock loading at one time actually within the dock & so engaged, but two more waiting outside ready to enter. Consequently T.'s ship could not enter the dock until July 11, & then in consequence of the coal agent's particular spout being engaged loading other ships, her B.'s vessel, turn for the spout did not arrive until July 23. No attempt was made by the coal agent during this interval to put coals on board by means of lighters, which it was not disputed could have been done. On July 3, B.'s agent not having provided coal, the vessel had to wait until July 29, when the loading actually commenced. In an action for demurrage at the stipulated rate, from July 26 until Aug. 15, when the loading was actually completed, reckoning the time from July 3, when the vessel was ready to enter the dock until July 26, as the twenty-three lay days for loading the vessel:—Held: the lay days did not begin when the vessel arrived outside the docks, but as it was usual in the collier trade to employ a loading agent, & as the terms upon which the vessels in charge of such agents were admitted to the docks were made publicly known & were not unreasonable, the lay days should be calculated from the day when the vessel was admitted to the dock in accordance with such terms, viz., July 11, & the commencement of such calculation was on & from that day, & not from the day when the turn of the vessel to go to the spout arrived, & demurrage should be computed from the expiration of such lay days until the loading of the vessel was completed.—TAPSCOTT v. BALFOUR (1872), L. The ship arrived at Bermuda with her cargo. The time allowed for discharging began to run at 6 a.m. on Monday, July 15, 1901, & the discharge of the cargo was not completed till 3 p.m. on Monday, July 29. It was admitted that, on the assumption that a fraction of a day was to be taken into consideration, the time allowed, at the rate of discharge mentioned in the charterparty, for discharging the cargo was a period of eleven working days & a portion of a twelfth day, ending at 9 a.m. on Saturday, July 27:—Held: upon the true construction of the charterparty, the demurrage began to run at 9 a.m. on Saturday, July 27, & not at the end of that day.—YEOMAN v. R., [1904] 2 K. The charterparty also provided that the cargo was to be discharged in two " weather working " days, & if the vessel was longer delayed demurrage was payable. The charterer ordered the vessel to go to Keen's Wharf in the Thames, but owing to a strike in the port she could not get to the wharf, & was ordered by the harbour-master to East-lane Tier, a quarter of a mile away. After 17 days' delay she was taken to Chatham & there discharged. Strike was not one of the perils excepted in the charterparty. The vessel was to " load in the Bramley Moore or Wellington Docks, High Level Railway," by the published regulations of which no coal agent was allowed to have more than three vessels in these docks at the same time. Defts. acted as their own coal agents ; & in consequence of their having other vessels with previous engagements, pltf.'s vessel, although ready, could not be loaded until her turn after defts.' other chartered vessels. In an action for demurrage in respect of this delay :—Held : the contract of defts. to load with the usual dispatch of the port was absolute, & could not be excused by their other engagements, even if pltfs. has been aware of them.—ASHCROFT v. CROW ORCHARD COLLIERY CO. beyond the lay days at a certain rate, contained a clause providing that the days for discharging should not count during the continuance of a strike, & also providing that in case of delay " by reason of " a strike no " claim for damages " should lie. The ship was detained at the port of discharge for four days beyond the lay days, not owing to the continuance of a strike, but owing to congestion following on the termination of a strike. In an action for demurrage for these four days :—Held : the detention was a " delay by reason of " a strike, which excluded claims for damages, & claims for damages for delay were not limited to claims for detention beyond the demurrage period, but included claims for demurrage.—MOOR LINE, LTD. v. DISTILLERS CO., LTD., [1912] S. The vessel having been loaded, one of the bills of lading was indorsed to the defts. Defts.' grain was stowed at the bottom of the main hold, & that of the other shippers on the top of it. The bill of lading, indorsed to defts. contained the words "paying freight for the same goods & all other conditions as per charterparty." Owing to the consignees, whose grain was placed on the top of defts.' having failed to take away their goods within the lay days, defts. were unable to obtain delivery of their grain, & three days' demurrage was incurred:—Held: defts. were liable for the demurrage, although they were prevented from getting their goods by the delay of other consignees.

(2) The bill of lading is, "on paying freight for the same goods, & all other conditions, as per charterparty." . . . Those words in a bill of lading are to be treated as words of reference to the charterparty & they therefore introduce into the bill of lading every condition that is in the charterparty by way of preference; so that they bring into the bill of lading every condition of the charterparty in its terms, & make every one of those conditions part of the bill of lading, as if they had been originally written into it. It turned out that the vessel held 257 tons, & upon ascertaining this the charterer refused to load the vessel, whereupon the owner rechartered her:—Held: the owner was entitled to recover damages from the charterer, viz. the difference of freight between that agreed to by defts. & that at which she was rechartered, & also demurrage for the days between her arrival in England & the days on which the negotiation for an arrangement was broken off.—BARKER v. WINDLE (1856), 6 E. & B. 675; 2 Jur. 3886. Removal of cargo for reconditioning.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that the ship should proceed to Leith & to London & there load cargo to be shipped by the charterers; & that a stevedore should be "appointed by the charterers in London only, but employed & paid for by owners." Cargo was loaded at Leith by the charterers, no information as to the London cargo being then asked for by the captain. On the voyage to London, owing to bad weather, some of the cargo was damaged & some was shifted. After the arrival of the vessel at London it was necessary to land the damaged cargo to be reconditioned, & to restow the cargo which had shifted. It also became necessary to shift some of the cargo to enable the London cargo to be properly stowed. Owing to these matters, & to some delay on the part of the stevedore who had been appointed under the terms of the charterparty, three days more than those allowed by the charterparty were occupied in loading at London:—Held: (1) the stevedore was the servant of the owners, & the charterers were not liable for demurrage arising either from his delay or from the necessity of moving the cargo; & (2) the charterers were not liable for any of the expenses of moving the cargo because they were either expenses of stowage or of work done for the benefit of the cargo without the authority of the charterers.—HARRIS v. BEST, RYLEY & Co. 3892. Delay with consent of charterer.]—In assumpsit upon a memorandum of charter, varied by a subsequent agreement between pltfs. & deft., the declaration stated that the charter was made "between certain persons trading under the firm of G., on behalf of the owners of the vessel, & deft."; that it was agreed that the ship, then at A., should sail to B., & there load certain quantities of iron & coals, & should proceed therewith to C. & there deliver the same, on payment of freight, etc.; forty running days to be allowed for loading at B. & for unloading at C., to commence on Dec. 16, 1834. After mutual promises, the declaration averred that the ship then being at A., with the consent of pltfs. & deft., & at the request of deft., remained at A. for the purpose of receiving certain coals, part of her cargo for the voyage, in lieu of loading such coals at B.; that the ship was, without any default or neglect of pltfs., detained for that purpose at A. until Dec. 17; that deft. discharged pltfs. from performing that part of the charter which related to the sailing of the ship from A. to C., up to & until she had completed the loading of the coals at A.; that being so loaded, the ship proceeded to B., & arrived there on Jan. 10, 1835, & took in the remainder of her cargo. The declaration assigned four breaches; first, that defts. detained the ship at B. twenty days over & above the lay days & the days of demurrage, whereby pltfs. were put to expense in maintaining the master & mariners, & whereby a large sum of money became payable to pltfs. for demurrage; secondly, that defts. further detained the ship at C., whereby pltfs. were put to further expense in maintaining, etc.; thirdly, non-payment of freight; fourthly, non-payment of demurrage. Deft. pleaded to so much of the first count as related to the demurrage, that he did not consent & request that the ship might remain at A. Upon a trial of the issue taken by this plea, it was found by the jury that deft. had consented to the new arrangement, but that pltfs. & not deft. made the request:—Held: consent only was material, & the verdict so found upon this issue was a verdict for pltfs.—GALLOWAY v. JACKSON (1842), 3 Man. & G. 960; 3 Scott, N. of the port of Dantzic to lie to, about four miles from that town, at a place called Fairwater. It was ready to take in a cargo on Mar. 14, but notice was not given to the agent of the freighter till Mar. 16, when he immediately took measures to send a cargo over the ice to the vessel, which was fully loaded by Apr. 5. It was then found that the ship could not pass the bar with a full cargo, & about sixty tons were, therefore, taken out & put into lighters. The vessel did not pass the bar till Apr. 14, when it took in that part of the cargo which had been previously taken out, & was ready for sea. It occupied six full days for unloading at the port of discharge in England. In an action for demurrage, the learned judge told the jury, that the question, whether the days from Apr. 5 to Apr. 14 were to be struck out of the account, depended on their opinion as to the custom of loading vessels at Dantzic; & therefore left it to the jury to say, whether the freighter had been guilty of delay:—Held: this direction was right.—HERRING v. WARD (1839), 8 L. 3899. Failure to provide cargo.]—In Feb. 1923, defts. purchased a quantity of coal from a colliery for shipment at Barry. It was the duty of the vendors to send the coal to Barry & load the steamship. On Mar. 26 defts. chartered pltf.'s steamship Panaghis Vergottis to load a full & complete cargo of coal. The cargo was to be loaded in one hundred & forty-four running hours, but the vessel could be & was in fact loaded in thirty-six running hours. Defts. nominated the vessel to the sellers on Mar. 27 on account of their purchase. The vessel was ordered to Barry Docks to load, & she arrived in Barry Roads on Apr. 10. Under the charterparty she did not become an arrived ship until she got into the dock. In ordinary times steamers are allowed to enter Barry Dock upon arrival, but no vessel is ordered to a tip unless in the opinion of the dock authority there is sufficient coal in hand to ensure continuous loading. This would generally mean about one-third of her cargo. It is not usual in Barry Dock to have coal in readiness at the dock in large quantities before the ship for which it is intended arrives in dock or at the tip. It would be impossible to store in the sidings in advance the whole cargo of each ship before it arrived in the dock or at the tip. Coal can be brought from many collieries down to the dock in a few hours. But not infrequently Barry Dock is congested with vessels loaded & waiting to be loaded. In those times the practice of the dock authority is, as defts. knew, to require an emergency stemming note to be signed by the master of the steamship & the shipper. Before the dock authority would accept the shipper's signature they had to be satisfied that there was then sufficient coal in hand to ensure continuous loading. When the Panaghis Vergottis arrived in Barry Roads on Apr. 10, Barry Dock was crowded with vessels loading & waiting to be loaded. The master of the Panaghis Vergottis signed the emergency stemming note on Apr. 11, & the agent of the colliery was willing to sign it on Apr. 12; but as he could not satisfy the dock authority that he had any coal for the vessel actually in hand he was not allowed to sign it, & the Panaghis Vergottis was not allowed to enter the dock, & so lost her turn. She was not admitted to the dock till Apr. 19. Pltf. claimed damages for the detention of the ship between Apr. 11 & 19 on the ground that defts. had failed to comply with their absolute obligation as charterers to provide a cargo, & secondly that defts. had committed a breach of an implied term of the charterparty to do what was required of the ship by the practice of the port to enable the ship to enter the dock & become an arrived ship:—Held: (1) defts.' failure to provide a cargo by the time the Panaghis Vergottis arrived in Barry Roads did not constitute a breach by them of their absolute duty to provide a cargo, as it was necessary for a ship to become an arrived ship before the shipper's duty to provide a cargo arose, & therefore defts. would have complied with their obligation if after the ship arrived in the dock they had provided a cargo in sufficient time to enable them to finish the loading in the lay days; (2) inasmuch as defts. knew that periods of congestion occurred at Barry, & that the dock authority had in such times to take special measures to ensure the prompt loading of ships & the rapid clearing of their docks, which might involve shippers being called upon to comply with requirements beyond those which they had ordinarily to observe, there was an implied term in the charterparty that defts. would do whatever was reasonable in order to enable pltf.'s ship to enter the dock & become an arrived ship, & in refusing to assist pltf.'s ship to get into dock by complying with the dock authority's requirements to have at least one-third of the vessel's cargo ready defts. had broken their contract & were liable in damages.—VERGOTTIS v. CORY (WILLIAM) & SON, LTD., [1926] 2 K. SUB-SECT. 3.—COMPUTATION OF DEMURRAGE.

A. In General.

3910. Day—Fraction of day counting as day.]—(1) Under a charterparty from Riga to London the charterers were to " load & discharge as fast as the ship can work, but a minimum of seven days to be allowed merchants, & ten days on demurrage over & above the said lying days at £25 per day " :—Held : that the lying days from the context meant " working " & not " running " days, & consequently that Sunday was not to be counted. (2) The ship got into dock in London on a Tuesday evening at 5 p.m. She could not get to her berth till 8 a.m. on the Wednesday, when she began unloading, & continued till 8 p.m. She began again at 4 a.m. on Thursday, & finished at 8 a.m. All the lay days had been consumed at the port of loading :—Held : in the case of demurrage a fraction of a day counted as a day, & consequently the charterers were liable for two days' demurrage. —COMMERCIAL S.S. (2) The charterparty also contained a clause that "the captain shall sign charterer's bills of lading as presented, without qualification except by adding weight unknown, within twenty-four hours after being loaded, or pay £10 for every day's delay, as & for liquidated damages, until the ship is totally lost or the cargo delivered":—Held: the clause imposed a penalty only, & did not confer a right to liquidated damages for the refusal of the captain to sign bills of lading, & as the charterer had in fact suffered no damage by such refusal, he was entitled to nominal damages only.—RAYNER v. REDERIAKT. 3913. Vessel detained for repairs—Period of detention omitted.]—Where demurrage commences to be payable under a charterparty owing to the default of the charterers in failing to provide a quay berth at the port of loading, the obligation to pay demurrage continues, in the absence of any default of the shipowner, until the completion of the loading.

A ship was chartered to go to a foreign port for a cargo, the charterers guaranteeing a cargo & quay berth ready at the port of shipment; owing to their inability to provide a quay berth the ship went on demurrage &, while lying at anchor waiting for a quay berth, was run into by another vessel. The ship was properly taken by her captain to another port for repair, & during her absence for that purpose a quay berth fell vacant which would otherwise have been given to her. After her return to the port of loading she was kept waiting a further six weeks for a quay berth. The shipowners claimed demurrage for the six weeks, but not for the period during which she was absent for repairs:—Held: upon the return of the ship to the port of loading the demurrage period was resumed without any break in the continuity of the demurrage obligation, & the charterers were liable to pay demurrage from that date until the loading was completed.—TYNE & BLYTH SHIPPING CO. v. LEECH, HARRISON & FORWOOD, [1900] 2 Q. 3914. Period of removal from port—Or unfitness for loading or discharging.]—A charterparty of an Italian ship provided that two hundred & sixteen running hours, Sundays & holidays excepted, weather permitting, should be allowed the charterers for loading & discharging, & that the lay days should commence from the time the steamer was ready to receive or discharge her cargo, the captain giving six hours' notice to the charterers' agents, berth or no berth. The exceptions clause excepted "restraint of princes, rulers & people." The ship arrived at Batoum, & notice of readiness to load was given, & the lay days began to run. Owing however to a dispute between the Russian & Italian Govts. the ship was ordered by the port authorities to leave Batoum & also Russian waters, & accordingly the ship went to Constantinople. Subsequently permission was obtained to load the ship at Batoum & she returned after being absent from the port a little over a fortnight. The owners subsequently claimed demurrage from the charterers, on the basis that the lay days continued to run during the period the ship was absent from Batoum:—Held: the lay days continued to run notwithstanding that the ship was compelled to leave the port by order of the port authorities.

Statement in Scrutton On Charterparties & Bills of Lading, 11th edition, art. 129, p. 342, that "If the ship has to be removed from the port, or becomes unfit for loading or discharging, e.g. by reason of a collision, the period of such removal or unfitness will be cut out from the period of demurrage," dissented from.—CANTIERE NAVALE TRIESTINA v. RUSSIAN SOVIET NAPHTHA EXPORT AGENCY, [1925] 2 K. 3915. What may be included—Whether Sundays.]—BROWN v. JOHNSON, No. 3926, post.

3916. —— ——.]—By a charterparty it was provided that the ship was to load a cargo of coal & deliver the same at Algoa Bay, & the cargo was "to be received from alongside according to the custom & law of the port of destination free of expense & risk to the ship at the average rate of not less than 120 tons per weather working day, Sundays & holidays excepted, time to count twenty-four hours after arrival in Algoa Bay & captain's notification to charterers' agents that vessel is ready to deliver, demurrage, if any, to be paid at the rate of 4*d.* per net registered ton per running day." The cargo consisted of 3,483 tons of coal, & on two Sundays during the period of the discharge of the cargo, the cargo was discharged. On certain other days during the discharge of the cargo, which were weather working days & none of them Sundays, the vessel was not only discharging cargo, but was also taking in ballast, which latter operation retarded & reduced the discharge of the cargo. The vessel could not safely have discharged more than a certain portion of her cargo at Algoa Bay without taking in ballast, & to have done so would have endangered the ship & the cargo remaining on board:—Held: (1) on the true construction of the charterparty, the charterers were entitled to thirty lay days for the discharge of the cargo, & the two Sundays would not count as lay days, but were in the nature of working overtime; (2) the charterers were not entitled to treat the days upon which ballast was taken in as not counting as lay days, as the delay so caused was not a breach of obligation on the part of the owners.—HOULDER v. WEIR, [1905] 2 K. 3922. ——.]—By the stipulation of a charterparty the vessel was to take in a cargo of coal at Newcastle, & proceed therewith to London or as near thereto as she could safely get, & deliver the same to the freighters or their assigns, etc.: to be delivered in five working days, demurrage over & above the said lying days £2 per day. The vessel arrived in the port of London, off Gravesend, on Mar. 9, & on Mar. 10, the cargo was sold, & the vessel entered by the freighters for a meter. On Mar. 20, she received an order from the harbour master to proceed to the Pool: on Monday, Mar. 22, she commenced working out her cargo, & was cleared on Mar. 27. It appeared that in consequence of the factors certificate that she was a metered vessel, the harbour master had detained her at Gravesend till Mar. 20, when her turn arrived for her to proceed to the Pool & discharge her cargo; that if she had not been on the meter's list, this regulation would not have applied, & she might have proceeded to the Pool at once; that it was occasionally the practice for factors not to enter such vessels in the meter's list, but that it was desirable that the cargo should be sold, subject to metage, by a sworn meter:—Held: under these circumstances the vessel was not to be considered as having arrived at her place of discharge until Mar. 20, & therefore the lying days did not begin to count till then.—KELL v. ANDERSON (1842), 10 M. & W. 498; 12 L. Clause 13 of the printed form provided that the cargo should be discharged in the customary manner as fast as the vessel could deliver during the ordinary working hours of the port, & by clause 15, should the vessel not be discharged with dispatch in the manner provided, demurrage was to be paid at the rate of £40 per day. Clause 24, which was typed, provided that the owners should pay the charterers dispatch money for all time saved in loading & discharging at the rate of £20 per day, & by clause 26 the cargo was "to be loaded & discharged according to the custom of the ports, but not less than the average rate of 100 fathoms per weather working day, Sundays & holidays excepted, reversible.

At West Hartlepool the docks were owned by the railway co., & vessels could only discharge their cargo in their turn at the berths assigned to them by the railway co. When these steamers arrived at West Hartlepool they found the port congested, with the result that there was delay in discharging their cargoes. In an action by the shipowners claiming demurrage:—Held: clause 26 imposed upon the charterers the obligation to discharge in a fixed time, & the vessel being an arrived ship when she arrived within the limits of the port of West Hartlepool, the obligation of the charterers to discharge ran from the date of such arrival.—VAN NIEVELT GOUDRIAN & CO. The vessel arrived at Bahia Blanca & anchored three ship's lengths from the railway pier at a place which, though not the usual loading place, was a possible loading place. The master gave the charterers notice of readiness to load. The charterers desired the Leonis to go alongside the pier, but all the berths alongside were already occupied, & the vessel lay at anchor for over a month, during which time no cargo came alongside, but eventually she succeeded in getting to a berth alongside the pier & shortly afterwards completed her loading:—Held: under the terms of the charterparty the lay days began to run when the vessel had reached her anchorage near the railway pier & the stipulated notice of readiness to load had been given by the master, as she was then an arrived ship, & at the disposition of the charterers, although she had not reached a berth.

The ship was ordered to Havre. In the course of the voyage she received orders from the French Admlty. to go to Cherbourg, & there await her turn for a discharging berth at Havre. Notice was given that if she disobeyed those orders & went to Havre she would on arrival there be at once sent back to Cherbourg, a distance of seventy-five miles, to await her turn. She obeyed the orders & put in to Cherbourg, & remained there for several days until she received permission from the French authorities to proceed:—Held: the fact that she would have been ordered back if she had gone to Havre, & that her 3944. ——.]—A charterparty provided that a steamer was to load a cargo at Sunderland, & proceed therewith to Genoa or Savona, as ordered, & there deliver her cargo alongside wharf &/or vessel &/or craft as ordered; & that the cargo was to be taken from alongside by consignees at port of discharge at the average rate of 500 tons per day, weather permitting, Sundays & holidays excepted, "provided steamer can deliver it at this rate; if longer detained consignees to pay steamer demurrage at the rate of 4*d.* per net register ton per running day. . . . Time to commence when steamer is ready to unload & written notice given, whether in berth or not. In case of strikes, lock outs, civil commotions, or any other causes or accidents beyond the control of the consignees which prevent or delay the discharging, such time is not to count unless the steamer is already on demurrage." The steamer was ordered to Savona, & arrived & was moored at the Punta, inside the port & harbour, on Sept. 22, 1909, when she gave notice of her readiness to unload. All the berths alongside wharves were occupied by other vessels, & the steamer could not get to a berth alongside the wharf until Sept. 25, when unloading commenced. By reason of certain rules made by the shore labourers, & recognised & sanctioned by the port authorities, shore labourers would not discharge vessels until they were in berth alongside a wharf, &, further, cargo was not brought to the rail by the ship's crew but by the shore labourers. These rules had for several years been part of the regulations of the port of Savona. Pltfs., the owners of the steamer, in an action against defts., who had chartered the vessel & were the shippers of the cargo, contended that time began to run as from the notice of Sept. 22 & claimed demurrage, while defts. contended that no demurrage was payable on the grounds (a) that the steamer was not an arrived ship & ready to unload until berthed at the wharf, & (b) that, the delay being due to the rules of the port, the case was within the clause as to strikes, etc.:—Held: (1) time commenced to run when the steamer was ready to unload "whether in berth or not" on notice being given; (2) the delay caused by the regulations was not a matter ejusdem generis with strikes, lock outs, & civil commotions, & was not within the strike clause of the charterparty; & defts. were liable.—NORTHFIELD S.S. 3946. Arrival under coal tip—"Usual colliery guarantee."]—By a charterparty between pltfs. & defts. it was provided that pltfs.' vessel should proceed to Grimsby & there load a cargo of coal in the usual manner according to the custom of the place from such colliery as the charterers might direct; & the loading time should be thirty-six running hours "on terms of usual colliery guarantee." The vessel arrived at the usual loading dock at Grimsby & was ready to load on July 19. Owing to the coal strike in South Wales a very large number of vessels were waiting to load coal at Grimsby, & pltfs.' vessel was unable to get a berth at a coal tip until July 29, when she was loaded within thirty-six hours. The coal was loaded from collieries at which no "colliery guarantee" was in use:—Held: defts. were not liable to pay demurrage, because there was a "usual colliery guarantee" in use at Grimsby, by which the time for loading did not commence until the vessel came under a coal tip.

What is the meaning of the word "usual"?

3945 i. Arrival at a general berth—Coal vessel.]—A charterparty stipulated that the vessel should "proceed to a loading berth in L. docks, as ordered, & there load in ten working days, as customary, a full & complete cargo of steam coals." On Apr. 16, the master intimated to the charterers that the ship, then lying at a loading berth was ready to receive her cargo. The charterers had, however, entered her in the dock master's books for a crane berth, for which the vessel had to wait her turn till May 3. 3947. The port of Odessa contained an outer & an inner harbour. The vessel arrived at a point in the outer harbour at which she was as near as she might safely get to a loading berth, & the master gave notice to defts.', the charterers, agents that she was ready to load. The cargo was stored at a quay in the inner harbour, & the agents were unwilling to load it elsewhere. The quays in the two harbours were the only places at which it was practicable to load, but there was no custom by which steamships under charterparty were not considered ready to receive cargo until after being moored alongside a quay. Owing to the crowded state of the port there was much delay before the vessel was able to take her place at the quay in the inner harbour where the cargo was stored, & she was not loaded till more than twelve days had elapsed from the time of her arrival in the outer harbour:—Held: the lay days were to be computed from the time of the arrival of the vessel in the outer harbour, & defts. were liable for demurrage.—PYMAN BROTHERS v. DREYFUS BROTHERS & Co. 3951. ——.]—A charterparty, dated July 16, 1894, provided that the ship should proceed to a customary loading place in the Royal Dock, Grimsby, & there receive a cargo of coal " to be loaded as customary at Grimsby as per colliery guarantee in fifteen colliery working days." Demurrage to be at the rate of 4*d.* per ton per day.

By a colliery guarantee, dated July 20, 1894, the colliery co. agreed with the charterers to load the ship with a cargo of coal " in fifteen colliery working days after the said ship is wholly unballasted & ready in dock at Grimsby to receive her entire cargo, strikes of pitmen, etc., always excepted. Time not to commence before Aug. 2. Time to count from the day following that on which notice of readiness is received, the said notice, in writing, to be handed to office . . . as soon as the ship is actually ready as above stipulated & not before. . . . The ship to move to the spout & proceed with her loading whenever required to do so during the entire continuance of her lay days. Demurrage as per charterparty, but not exceeding 4*d.* per registered ton per colliery working day." The customary loading place for coal in the Royal Dock, Grimsby, was under a " spout " or shoot, through which the coal was shot on board the ship.

Notice that the ship was ready was given on Sept. 3. She had to wait her turn to get under the spout, &, but for delay for which it was admitted the charterers were responsible, she could have been placed under it on Sept. 17. She did not in fact get under it until Oct. 10. The loading was completed on Oct. 13. In an action by the shipowner against the charterers for demurrage:—Held: the provisions of the colliery guarantee as to loading were incorporated into the charterparty, & the fifteen lay days commenced to run from the day after that on which notice was given that the ship was ready in the dock at Grimsby to receive the cargo.—MONSEN v. MACFARLANE & Co., [1895] 2 Q. In an action for demurrage it was admitted that the roads were outside the geographical limits of the port of Savona & of what was known commercially as the port, & were the ordinary place at which vessels lay until there should be room in the harbour where alone discharging could be effected. The pursuers averred " that according to the custom of the port, vessels on arrival in the roads are reported at the custom house, & are allotted berths in the harbour according to the order of reporting ":—Held: assuming the pursuer's averment to be accurate, the time at which under the charterparty the lay days began was 3 p.m. on Tuesday, the hour of reporting at the custom house, although the vessel had not then arrived a a place in the harbour where she could discharge.—HORSLEY LINE, LTD. v. ROECHLING BROTHERS, [1908] S. At the foot of the charterparty was a memorandum, "Vessel to load in B. M. dock or W. Dock, high level." On the day following the execution of the charterparty, the P. was, as a matter of favour, admitted into the W. Dock, & was then ready to receive her cargo, but owing to the regulations of the dock authorities, she did not begin to load until about a fortnight later. Upon her arrival at D. disputes arose between her captain & pltf. as to the form of the bill of lading, & in consequence thereof her cargo was not unloaded until twenty days had elapsed after the expiration of the nineteen running days, if calculated from the time of her admission into the W. Dock. In order to obtain delivery of the cargo, pltf. was obliged to pay £80 claimed as demurrage in respect of the twenty days, which he now sued to recover back:—Held: the nineteen running days were to be calculated from the time when the P. was admitted into the W. In these cases lay day hours not to count & demurrage not to accrue. In case charterers can arrange to load or discharge ship on Sundays or holidays, captain to allow work to be done, half such time actually used to count. Days to be averaged over all voyages performed under & during the entire currency of this charter to avoid demurrage. Loading time to count from 6 a.m. after ship is reported at Custom House & ready free of turn. . . . Time not to count at port of loading & discharge between the hours of 1 p.m. on Saturdays & 7 a.m. on Mondays. Ship to work day & night if requested to do so." The Ben Vrackie arrived at Marmagoa in April, 1908. Earlier in the same year plague had broken out at Marmagoa, but it had come to an end in April. The plague had caused a scarcity of workmen, & that had delayed the vessels which arrived at Marmagoa before the Ben Vrackie, & she had to wait until some of those prior vessels had left the berths. Additional delay was caused to the Ben Vrackie by the fact that another vessel which arrived after her was allowed by the railway co. owning the wharf to get a berth in priority to the Ben Vrackie. At Marmagoa the working day was 10½ hours. The Ben Vrackie having been detained for some time at Marmagoa, the shipowners claimed demurrage:—Held: (1) under the charterparty a "day" was not a calendar day, but a conventional day; (2) the vessel's right to demurrage at Marmagoa must be determined according to the number of days occupied there in loading, although the charterers would be entitled to abate the amount of such demurrage by taking credit for any time saved at the port of discharge; (3) the charterers were not excused by the exceptions of scarcity of workmen or epidemics, inasmuch as it had not been shown that either of these causes had hindered the loading of the Ben Vrackie; (4) the act of the railway co. in allowing another vessel to get a berth before the Ben Vrackie was not an intervention of "sanitary, customs, & other constituted authorities"

3969. ——.]—By a charterparty dated Apr. 13, 1915, pltfs. chartered their vessel, the O., to an American export co. to carry a cargo of 6,350 tons of grain from Newport News to Avonmouth. By a contract of sale the ownership of the cargo passed to defts. The charterparty & the bill of lading, which was to complete & supersede the charterparty, provided that the vessel should "be loaded according to berth terms, and with customary berth dispatch, & if detained longer than five days, Sundays & holidays excepted, charterers to pay demurrage [at a certain rate] . . . provided that such detention shall occur by default of charterers or their agents, & same rate of demurrage to apply at port of discharge," & further, that she should discharge at Avonmouth, "in accordance with the rules of the Bristol Channel & West of England Corn Trade Assocn." It was also provided that the steamer might discharge at all hours when the customs authorities would allow her to do so, provided that an extra expense in working at night or on Sundays should be borne by the party ordering the work. The rules of the Bristol Channel & West of England Corn Trade Assocn. provided that a steamer carrying a cargo of 6,350 tons should be allowed eight "working days of twenty-four hours each," Sundays excluded, to discharge. The O. arrived off Avonmouth at 8.15 a.m. on Tuesday, July 6, & by the terms of the charterparty & bill of lading the lay days began at that time. The discharge was finished at 5 p.m. on July 23. Pltfs. claimed demurrage in respect of eight days, nine hours, alleging that, allowing for exclusion of Sunday, July 11, the lay days ended at 8.15 a.m. on July 15:—Held: (1) the provision that the same rate of demurrage should apply at the port of discharge as at the port of shipment did not necessarily imply that the liability of the charterers was restricted at the port of discharge as at the port of shipment; (2) "a working day of twenty-four hours" meant a period of twenty-four hours commencing at the time when the ship was ready to discharge, excluding Sundays & certain other excepted days.—ORPHEUS STEAM SHIPPING CO. v. BOVILL & SONS (1916), 114 L. Also on Sundays & holidays, such time not to count as lay days unless used:—Held: the charterers were entitled to twenty-four working hours, for the loading or discharging of each 350 tons.

3975. Weather working day—Mode of computation.]—A charterparty provided that cargo should be loaded at a certain rate per weather-working day. On certain days owing to bad weather cargo could only be loaded for a few hours:—Held: the time so occupied in loading cargo was not to be reckoned against the charterers as a whole, but as a part only, of a weather-working day.

Where work is stopped by bad weather, but a substantial quantity of work is done, though not amounting to half a day, it is to be reckoned as half a day: where substantially more than half a day's work is done, though not amounting to a whole day, it is to be counted as a whole day; no smaller fraction than half a day should be taken into the calculation.—BRANCKELOW S.S. 3976. —— Construed in natural & ordinary meaning—Admissibility of evidence of custom to contrary.]—The expression "weather working day," as used of lay days for loading or discharging a vessel, has a natural & ordinary meaning, namely, a day on which the work of loading or discharging is not prevented by bad weather. Therefore, where by a charterparty the charterers bind themselves to take delivery of the cargo at an average rate per weather working day, evidence of a custom that at the port of discharge the expression bears a different meaning is not admissible.

By a charterparty a vessel was to proceed to one or two safe ports between Valparaiso & Pisagua inclusive, as ordered on arrival at Valparaiso, & there deliver the cargo in the usual & customary manner alongside such wharf, etc., where she could always safely lie afloat as directed by the consignees. The exceptions clause included a provision, "detention through . . . delay by . . . surf . . . not to count in the time allowed for

The cargo was to be taken delivery of from alongside ship at port of discharge, "at the average rate of not less than 250 tons per weather working day (Sundays & holidays excepted)." . . . The colliery guarantee provided for the loading of the ship in fifteen days, & contained certain exceptions as to time, which were "not to be computed as part of the aforesaid loading time, unless used," including holidays, time from 5 p.m. on Saturday until 7 a.m. on Monday, & any time lost through strikes causing a stoppage at the colliery. The colliery guarantee also provided that "for the purpose of this guarantee all holidays & full day stoppages at our collieries shall be deemed to commence at 5 p.m. the working day preceding, & to end at 7 a.m. the working day, following such holiday or stoppage & that demurrage, if any, was to be at certain specified rates per day, "demurrage to be in accordance with the above scale payable per colliery working day, or in proportion for any part of a day, which for the purpose of computation shall be divisible into twenty-four parts." The parties had agreed that demurrage at the port of loading should be payable at a certain rate other than that specified in the scale in the colliery guarantee. In an action by the shipowners claiming demurrage at the port of loading:—Held: in computing the time for which demurrage was payable, the time after 5 p.m. on the days preceding, & the time before 7 a.m. on the days succeeding, Sundays & holidays did not count.—CLINK v. HICKIE, BORMAN & CO. The charterparty provided that the ship should proceed to a named dock, & there load a cargo of coal in twelve clear working days, Sundays & holidays excepted, "subject to the conditions of the colliery guarantee," "demurrage at loading port as per colliery guarantee." The colliery guarantee provided for the loading of the ship in twelve days, & contained certain exceptions as to time, which were "not to be computed as part of the aforesaid loading time, unless used," including all holidays whereby work was suspended at the docks or colliery, time from 5 p.m. on Saturday until 7 a.m. on Monday, & any time lost through strikes causing a stoppage of the colliery. The colliery guarantee also provided that "for the purpose of this guarantee all holidays & full day stoppages at our collieries shall be deemed to commence at 5 p.m. the working day preceding, & to end at 7 a.m. the working day following such holiday or stoppage"; & that demurrage, if any, was to be at certain specified rates per day, varying in proportion to the tonnage of the vessel, "demurrage to be in accordance with the above scale payable per colliery working day." The ship proceeded to the port named. The lay days commenced on Mar. 16, & expired on Mar. 31. On Apr. 9 a strike commenced at the colliery. The ship remained at the port. On May 24, the strike continuing, the colliery co. gave notice that they could not load the ship, which notice was, on May 26, communicated to pltfs. They, with reasonable dispatch, obtained another charterparty, & the ship left the port on June 17:—Held: (1) "colliery working day" meant a day which was an ordinary working day at the colliery in normal circumstances, although no work might, in fact, have been done at the colliery on such day; (2) the exception as to time lost through strikes only applied to the lay days & not to the time when the ship was on demurrage; (3) the shipowners were justified in keeping the ship at the port after the strike commenced, & were entitled to demurrage for every day from Mar. 31 up to June 17, excluding Sundays & holidays; (4) in calculating the period of demurrage no account was to be taken of the conventional extension of Sundays & holidays, & the demurrage period included the time from 5 p.m. to midnight before & from midnight to 7 a.m. after Sundays & holidays.—SAXON S.S. 3984. ——.]—By a charterparty dated July 13, 1915, pltfs. chartered the steamship M. B. to defts. for a voyage with a cargo of timber from Archangel to Sharpness Docks. By clause 10 of the charter the cargo was to be discharged with the customary steamer dispatch of the port, & in the ordinary working hours. By clause 11 demurrage was fixed at £90 per day "where delay occasioned through any fault of the charterer." By clause 20 the steamer was to be discharged at the average rate of 100 standards of timber per weather working day. On Sept. 22, 1915, the M. B. arrived at Sharpness Docks with a cargo of 747 standards of timber. Pltfs. alleged that under the charter the lay days commenced on the following day, & that, therefore, by clause 20, the unloading should have been completed by Oct. 1, whereas in fact it was not completed until Oct. 19; & they claimed £1,582 10*s.* demurrage:—Held: (1) pltfs. were entitled to succeed, since defts. had failed to comply with the terms of the charter, which was a "fixed lay-day" charter, the effect of clause 20 being to quantify by agreement that which would have been achieved by the application of clause 10; (2) where clause 20 operated the words in clause 11 "where delay occasioned through any fault of the charterer," became inapplicable.—BAIRD & CO. v. PRICE, WALKER & CO. Demurrage for any days over & above the laying days was to be paid at the rate of £35 per day. By the direction of the charterers work was done in loading the ship on a Sunday after the lay days had begun to run & before they had expired:—Held: the proper inference to be drawn was that the parties had agreed to include that day among the lay days, & notwithstanding the express terms of the charterparty, that day was to be counted as a lay day.

(2) In the absence of any indication to the contrary, the same inference is to be drawn when work is in fact done in loading the ship on a Sunday or holiday, whether by the direction or at the request of the charterers or not.

The vessel having loaded at a place other than those last mentioned at a rate less than 300 tons per working day, proceeded to Middlesbrough, where she discharged her cargo at a higher rate per day:—Held: in calculating the demurrage, the days for loading & unloading must be kept separate, & the charterers had no right to add together the whole number of days occupied in loading & unloading for the purpose of ascertaining the average amount of work done on each day.—MARSHALL v. BOLCKOW (1881), 6 Q. 3997. Effect of payment of dispatch money.]—A charterparty provided that the charterers were to have "the option of averaging days for loading & discharging, in order to avoid demurrage . . . dispatch money at the rate of ten shillings per hour to be paid for any time saved in loading or discharging, to be settled in loading or discharging ports respectively." The vessel was loaded within the time allowed, & the charterers claimed dispatch money for the days saved & the amount so due to them was indorsed on the charterparty. At the port of discharge the lay days were exceeded, & the shipowners claimed in respect thereof demurrage:—Held: the charterers could not exercise their option of averaging days of loading & discharge, because the question of how the time saved at port of loading was to be treated must be considered as closed when the vessel sailed from port, & therefore the shipowners were entitled to claim in full demurrage.—OAKVILLE S.S. When she arrived in S. the cargo was delivered to pltfs. except 300 tons, which the master held, claiming a lien thereon for demurrage. Pltfs. thereupon took action, claiming delivery of the salt & damage for non-delivery. Deft. pleaded a lien & counterclaimed for demurrage. 4013. Abandonment of lien—Omission of stipulation in sub-charterparty.]—(1) In a charterparty deft. agreed to "load a full & complete cargo, say about 1,100 tons":—Held: the words "say about 1,100 tons" were words of contract & not of expectation only; deft. was bound to load a full cargo unless that exceeded such a quantity as might reasonably be described as "about 1,100 tons"; if the ship would hold much more than 1,100 tons, then deft. was not bound to load a full & complete cargo, but only such a quantity as might reasonably be described as "about 1,100 tons"; there was no rule of law as to the exact meaning of such phrases as "about 1,100"; it was for the jury in every case to determine what percentage above or under 1,100 may reasonably be allowed.

(2) Acting here as a jury, for the purpose of assessing the damages, & for the purposes of this case only, the ct. fixed upon 3 per cent. as a reasonable percentage to be allowed in this case, & interpreted the agreement to mean that if the ship would hold only 1,133 tons or less, then deft. was bound to load a full & complete cargo, but that if the ship would hold over 1,133 tons, then deft. was only bound to load 1,133 tons & no more. The ship could safely have carried 1,210 tons. Deft. loaded 1,080:—Held: pltf. was entitled to recover dead freight for 53 tons.

(3) A shipowner let his ship to pltf. by a charterparty, reserving to his captain an absolute lien on the cargo for freight & demurrage. Pltf. let the ship to deft. by a charterparty not expressly reserving any lien. of lading there was no stipulation as to the time for unloading, & pltfs.' vessel could only be discharged at one of three berths, the property of the consignees, which at the time of the arrival of pltfs.' ship at the port had all been occupied by other vessels with cargoes belonging to defts. 4021. Non-payment of freight—Liability of consignee.]—Declaration that, in consideration that pltf., at deft.'s request, would deliver wheat, then on board pltf.'s ship, having been conveyed therein for freight to be paid by the person who should receive it, to deft. with lighters provided by deft., deft. promised to receive it in a reasonable time: breach, that deft. made default in receiving in a reasonable time, whereby pltf. was detained an unreasonable time in discharging. Deft. traversed the promise & the default, & pleaded that pltf. was not ready to deliver.

It was proved that, by charterparty, pltf., owner of a ship, agreed with the freighter to deliver a cargo at the port of discharge on payment of freight, conformably to the bills of lading; & a certain number of lay days were allowed, after which demurrage was to be charged at a given rate per day; the bills of lading stipulated for delivery to the freighter, or his assigns, on paying freight as per charterparty. Deft. became assignee of the bill of lading, gave notice thereof to pltf., & demanded the goods, sending his lighters to receive them. Pltf. delivered a portion, & demanded payment for freight on so much; deft. refusing to pay, pltf. refused to deliver the residue, & the running days expired. Some time after, pltf. delivered the residue, & was paid the remaining freight. Deft. failing to pay these dues, the Johan was detained for nine days by the harbour authorities, at the expiration of which time the master obtained her release by paying the demand himself:—Held: assuming that deft. was by the statute liable to pay the dues, & that the detention of the vessel was justifiable, pltf. was only entitled to recover the amount he had paid for the dues, but not damages for the time the vessel was detained; inasmuch as he might at once have procured her release by payment of the money.—MOLLER v. JECKS (1865), 19 C. 4024. Failure to present bill of lading to master—Within reasonable time.]—By a charterparty a steamer was to load a cargo & proceed therewith to one of certain named ports of call, at the master's option for orders, unless orders were given on signing bills of lading, to discharge at a port on the continent within certain limits. By clause 13 the steamer was to be loaded at the rate of a certain number of tons per day, otherwise demurrage was to be paid by the charterers; & by clause 16 dispatch money was to be paid "for all time saved in loading" at the rate of £15 a day. By clause 21 the master was to sign bills of lading in the form indorsed thereon at any rate of freight that the charterers might require, but any difference in amount between the bill of lading freight & the total gross chartered freight was to be settled at the port of loading before the steamer sailed. By clause 22 orders as to the port of discharge were to be given to the master within twenty-four hours after notice of arrival at the port of call & for any detention after that the charterers were to pay 30*s.* per hour. The steamer loaded in eight days, nineteen days before the expiration of the lay days, & the masters applied to the charterers for the bills of lading & orders, but they were not forthcoming until the expiration of three days from the completion of the loading, owing to the charterers, who had decided to give orders for the port of discharge on signing bills of lading, not having made up their minds as to the port to which they would order the steamer. The steamer sailed on the expiration of the third day. It was agreed that the charterers had the right to keep the steamer for twenty-four hours after completion of the loading for the purpose of settling accounts, & the shipowners claimed damages for the detention of the steamer during the two remaining days:—Held: (1) after the loading had been completed, the charterers were not entitled to keep the steamer for the full period of the lay days; they were under a obligation to present bills of lading to the master for signature within a reasonable time, which by the agreement was twenty-four hours, after completion of the loading, & they had committed a breach of contract in having delayed to do so for two days beyond the twenty-four hours; & there being no agreed rate of damages specified in the charterparty for the breach the shipowners were entitled to recover the loss actually sustained; (2) the charterers were entitled to dispatch money for the whole of the nineteen days saved in the loading.—NOLISEMENT (OWNERS) v. BUNGE & BORN, [1917] 1 K. 4025. Congestion in docks.]—If by reason of the crowded state of the London docks, a ship is detained there before she can be unloaded, a longer time than is allowed for that purpose, by the terms of the charterparty, the freighter is liable for this detention to the owner of the ship.—RANDALL v. LYNCH (1809), 2 Camp. 352; 170 E. 4028. —— For loading—Meaning of "turn."]—By a charterparty, the ship was to proceed to Newcastle, &, on arrival there, "be ready forthwith, in regular turns of loading, to take on board a full & complete cargo of four keels of coals, & the remainder coke." The loading of coal at Newcastle is by Act of Parliament regulated by "turns"; but there is no statutory regulation as to the loading of coke. In an action upon the charterparty in the county ct., for not loading the coke within a reasonable time:—Held: the expression "regular turns of loading," with reference to coal, meant in "turn," at the spout, as directed by the Act of Parliament; & evidence which was offered to show that the usage or practice of Newcastle was to load coke "in turn" in the same manner, was improperly rejected.—LEIDEMANN v. SCHULTZ (1853), 14 C. 4029. —— ——.]—Deft. chartered pltf.'s ship upon the terms that she should go to a foreign port for a cargo, & "there, in the usual & accustomed manner, load in her regular turn." The ship went to the port, but owing to deft.'s default was not ready when her turn came, & was consequently detained eleven days. When her turn came round again she was ready, but the wind coming on to blow, & the harbour being crowded, the harbour master refused to allow the ship to go up to load, & she was consequently detained three days. Pltf. having sued on the charterparty claiming damages for the detention:—Held: the detention for the three days was the legal & natural consequence of deft.'s default in not having the ship ready for the first turn, & pltf. was entitled to damages in respect of the three days as well as the eleven days.—JONES v. ADAMSON (1876), 1 Ex. 4034. Commencement of liability for delay—On notice of arrival.]—Pltfs. chartered a ship to defts. by a charterparty which provided (inter alia), as follows: "time for discharging to count twenty-four hours after arrival at or off port of discharge & notice of arrival handed to receivers . . . & if vessel is detained owing to congestion of ships or traffic receivers to pay damages for detention . . .," & "if & when the price of good class bunker coals ordinarily used in this trade is reduced to 80*s.* per ton, the freight to be 10*s.* per standard less." In the events which happened pltfs. claimed damages for detention & defts. counterclaimed for a reduction of freight on account of a fall in the price of bunker coal. One of defts. also counterclaimed because the quantity of cargo delivered was less than the quantity stated in the bill of lading:—Held: (1) the detention clause covered the period between the giving of notice & the arrival of the ship at her discharging berth; (2) defts. were entitled to a reduction of freight because at the material time the price of bunker coal was not more than 80*s.* per ton at ports on the north-east English coast; (3) in the particular circumstances, the statement in the bill of lading with regard to the amount of cargo shipped was conclusive against pltfs.—CHARLTON S.S. 4030 i. Failure to provide cargo.]—In an action by owners of a vessel for damages for undue detention:—Held: defenders were not excused for their failure to have a cargo ready in due time by reason of the unusual demand upon the colliery with which they had contracted.—GARDINER v. MACFARLANE, MCCRINDELL & CO., THE LISMORE (1893), 20 R. d. Default of railway company.]—A. shipped some stone to B., in O., by vessel, to be transhipped at P., & carried by the O. Ry. Co. A detention of eleven days took place at P. through the railway co., for which A. brought this action against B., claiming damages for the detention of the vessel. There being no evidence to show that the consignee undertook more than to receive the stone at O.:—Held: he was not responsible for the detention of the vessel.—MCGREVY v. RATHBONE (1860), 11 C. e. Failure to obtain coaling order—Coaling order necessary by custom of port—Knowledge of both parties.]—By charterparty which did not fix any time for loading a ship was chartered to go to the port of N. & there load "in the usual & customary manner" a cargo of coals which the charterers bound themselves to ship. By the custom of the port of N., of which both parties were aware, a berth to load coal cannot be obtained until a coaling order from the colliery is produced. The charterers duly ordered a cargo of coals from the W. colliery, & instructed their agent at N. to attend to the loading of the ship. When she arrived, owing to an exceptional press of business at the W. & other local collieries, she failed to obtain coaling orders, & could not therefore get a loading berth. It was proved that the course taken by the charterers in ordering a cargo from the W. colliery was in the circumstances reasonable:—Held: the charterers were not liable in damages to the shipowners for the detention of the ship owing to delay in loading, on the ground that where no definite time is fixed for loading, & both parties are aware of the conditions of the port of loading, the charterer fulfils his obligation if he takes all reasonable means to have the cargo loaded at the earliest time compatible with these conditions.—ARDAN S.S. 4035. At demurrage rate.]—If a ship is detained beyond the days of demurrage allowed by the charterparty, the stipulated demurrage is primâ facie the measure of compensation for the further time; but it is competent to the owner or the freighter to show that this would be more or less than a fair compensation for the detention.—MOORSOM v. BELL (1811), 2 Camp. 616; 170 E. 4036. —— Covering whole period of detention—Period of demurrage not stipulated.]—Where a charterparty provides that if the ship is detained at the port of discharge after the expiry of the lay days demurrage shall be payable at a certain specified rate, but is silent as to the period for which she may be so kept on demurrage, if after the expiry of a reasonable time beyond the lay days the shipowner, instead of landing the goods & taking his ship away, allows her to be further detained, the demurrage rate of compensation will apply to the whole period of detention & not merely to the reasonable time.—WESTERN S.S. The original port of loading having been wrecked by a tidal wave the ship was by agreement diverted to another port, where great difficulty was experienced in loading & dispatching ships at & from that port. At the expiration of a reasonable time beyond the lay days the charterers had not commenced to load the steamer & she was further detained for the purpose of loading. Pltfs. claimed damages for the detention beyond the reasonable time:—Held: the demurrage rate of compensation applied to the whole period of detention, & therefore pltfs. were not entitled to damages as distinguished from the demurrage rate for the extra period of detention.—INVERKIP S.S. Dispatch money 10*s.* per hour on any time saved in loading or for discharging." Four days were saved in loading & five days in discharging cargo, making together nine days, which if calculated at twenty-four hours a day, would make 216 hours, or at twelve hours a day, 108 hours:—Held: "dispatch money" was payable under the charterparty at the rate of 10*s.* per hour per day of twenty-four hours.—LAING v. HOLLWAY (1878), 3 Q. 4044. ——.]—By a charterparty, "seven weather working days, Sundays & holidays excepted," were "to be allowed by shipowners to charterers for loading," & for any time beyond that period the charterers were to pay demurrage at the rate of £40 per day, & "for each clear day saved in loading the charterers" were to "be paid or allowed by the owners the sum of £20." The loading of a ship under this charterparty was continued during holidays. No evidence was given of any agreement in fact varying the terms of the charterparty & providing that the holidays in question should count as lay days:—Held: no inference of law could be drawn so varying the terms, & the charterers, having loaded in days less than the lay days, were entitled to dispatch money, £20 per day, for days "saved in loading."

It is a question, not of law, but of fact, whether or not there was an agreement varying the terms of the charterparty & providing that the holidays in question should count as lay days, I am unable to see any evidence of such an agreement (LORD LOREBURN, C.).

There are some things so commonly known & practices so universal that, without evidence other than the transaction itself, one infers a contract. What the parties do is itself, where there is such a known course of dealing, evidence of their agreement. In such a case the mere actings of the parties in accordance with usage is of itself evidence of a contract (LORD HALSBURY.).—NELSON (JAMES) & SONS, LTD. v. NELSON LINE (LIVERPOOL), LTD., [1908] A. The discharge of the ship took 12 days 13 hours & was completed at 10 a.m. Saturday, Feb. 27. If the whole period of time allowed by the charterparty had been taken for the discharge, the lay days, by reason of the excepted time, would not have expired until 9 a.m. on March 10, or 10 days 23 hours after the discharge was actually completed. The shipowners contended that dispatch money was only payable in respect of the difference between 20 days & 12 days 13 hours, i.e., 7 days 11 hours:—Held: the charterers were entitled to dispatch money in respect of the subsequent time between 1 p.m. on Saturdays & 7 a.m. on Mondays included in the lay days, the same being running days "saved" within the meaning of the charterparty, & dispatch money was therefore payable in respect of 10 days 23 hours.—Re ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET CO., LTD. & RIVER PLATE S.S. The master, who was paid a fixed salary, "to include all charges & allowances," signed a bill of lading for the whole cargo, making the goods deliverable to "order or assigns, freight to be paid in cash at port of discharge, the rate of discharge, rate of freight, & other conditions as per charterparty, with 5 per cent. primage in cash on delivery as customary." The cargo was received at the port of discharge by defts., the indorsees of the bill of lading, as agents of the charterer, & the freight paid:—Held: defts. were not liable for primage.

SECT. 13.—LIEN.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

4054. Origin—Implication of law.]—(1) The right of lien arises either by implication of law, or by express contract between the parties.

(2) Freight is the reward payable to the carrier for the safe carriage & delivery of goods. It is payable only on safe carriage & delivery. If the goods are safely carried, the master of the ship has a lien on the goods for the amount of the freight due for such carriage, & cannot be compelled to part with the goods till such freight be paid.

(3) Where parties, instead of trusting to the general rule of law with respect to freight, make a special contract for a payment which is not freight, it must depend upon the terms of that contract, whether a lien does or does not exist. When the contract made gives no lien, a ct. of law will not supply one by implication.

(4) D. & co., of Liverpool, shipped goods for Sydney. The bill of lading stated the goods to be to the shipper's order or assigns, "he, or they paying freight for the goods here as per margin." In the margin it was stipulated as follows:—"Freight payable in Liverpool to M., one month after sailing, vessel lost or not lost." The bill of lading passed into the hands of K. & co. as indorsees for value. On the ship's arrival at Sydney, the port of delivery, the master was advised by the shipowner that the sum agreed to be paid as freight at Liverpool, had not been paid, & he refused to deliver the goods to K. & co., the assignees of the bill of lading unless freight was paid, claiming a lien on the goods for the unpaid freight:—Held: the amount agreed to be paid by the shippers at the port of shipment, one month after sailing of the ship, did not acquire the legal incident of freight, though described under that name in the bill of lading, it being merely money to be paid for taking goods on board & undertaking to carry, & not for carrying the goods; & there was no right of lien on the goods by the shipowner in respect of such sum of money being unpaid; (5) as the bill of lading provided that the freight was payable to a third party, M., & not to the shipowner, payment for freight to the master or shipowner, would be no answer to an action in England, by M. in the name of the shipowner, for non-payment of freight.—KIRCHNER v. VENUS (1859), 12 Moo. 4056. Removal of goods from wharf to a distance—Under alleged authority given by lien.]—A vessel was chartered on a voyage out & home, & by the charter the charterer was to ship & the captain to receive at the discharging port, a cargo of lead, receiving freight for same at a certain rate per ton when delivered. When the vessel arrived on her homeward voyage at Newcastle, her port of discharge, a dispute arose between the charterers & the shipowner as to the payment of the freight; & they then agreed that the vessel should discharge 5 tons of the lead at a time, which was to be landed on the wharf, & weighed to ascertain when 5 tons had been discharged, & the freight was to be then paid on each 5 tons as weighed. Certain lead was accordingly landed on the wharf for the purpose of being weighed. M., who was acting under the orders of, & indemnified by, the shipowner, conveyed this lead from the wharf at Gateshead, where the ship was lying, to his warehouse on the opposite side of the river:—Held: the shipowner's lien for the freight was lost by the removal of the lead from the wharf, & pltf. was entitled to recover.—HAMMOND v. M'CRIE (1855), 3 C. 4075. Voyage not completed by default of owner.]—(1) If in the course of a voyage a ship carrying cargo is damaged by perils of the seas, the shipowner, intending to carry the cargo to destination, is entitled to a reasonable time for repairing his ship or for transhipping, & for this purpose to retain the cargo.

(2) If he is prevented from carrying the cargo to destination by the act or default of the owner, he has a possessory lien on the cargo for the entire freight, & for contribution to any general average expenses incurred.

A cargo which had been discharged from a condemned French vessel was lying in the island of Terceira. The owner in England chartered a ship for a lump sum to go out & bring the cargo to one of several ports, according to orders to be given at Scilly or Falmouth, the port of call: one of these ports was Hamburg. In accordance with this charter the ship proceeded to Terceira & took on board the cargo, upon which, unknown to the shipowner, who also acted as master there was a respondentia bond given to pay other expenses than the expenses of carrying on, & made payable at Falmouth, which was not one of the ports of destination specified in the charter. In the voyage to England the ship was stranded at Scilly, & general average expenses were incurred, & the cargo was landed & stored Feb. 23, in the shipowner's name. The charterer, who was aware of the bond, ordered the shipowner, Feb. 25, to carry the cargo to Hamburg. Thereupon the cargo was arrested by Admlty. warrant, Mar. 4, at the suit of the respondentia bondholder. The owner not appearing, nothing was done by any party until May 23, when the cargo was removed to London by order of the ct., & then sold. The shipowner, however, in the meanwhile settled with his underwriters on ship & freight, nearly upon the terms of a total loss. The legal origin of the bond was not disputed:—Held: the shipowner was prevented from carrying on the cargo by the default of the owner; he therefore had a possessory lien on the cargo for his full freight & general average; & such lien must be satisfied in preference to the respondentia bond, upon the ground that so carrying the cargo, the shipowner had rendered services in the nature of salvage to the bond.

4077. Voyage not commenced.]—It was provided by a charterparty that £250, part of the freight, should be advanced in cash on signing bills of lading & clearing at the Custom House, & that for the security & payment of all freight, dead freight, demurrage, & other charges, the master or owners should have an absolute lien & charge on the cargo. The ship was loaded & cleared at the Custom-House, but the £250 was not paid, & consequently the captain did not sign bills of lading, and the ship never started on her voyage. The charterer having become insolvent, his trustee in liquidation gave notice to the owner that he disclaimed all interest under the charterparty. The owner claimed a lien on the cargo for the £250 as freight:—Held: the ship never having earned or commenced to earn freight, no lien arose.—Re CHILD, Ex p. NYHOLM (1873), 43 L. J. 4078. 4079. Cargo damaged but capable of being forwarded.]—Pltfs.' cargo of coals on board the K. was damaged by a collision at C., the port of loading, & had to be unloaded. It was ultimately reshipped & carried on to B., & used by pltfs. in smithies, though it was not purchased for this purpose. The shipowner was not willing to ship a fresh cargo except on fresh terms, & pltfs. did not ascertain what those terms were. On a reference as to damages, in an action between the owners of the coal & the owners of the vessel with which the K. came into collision, the assistant registrar decided that pltfs. were only entitled to recover the difference between the value of sound & damaged coal at the port of loading, & that if the value was that at the port of destination it must be taken to be the value of smithy coal. On objection to this report:—Held: the shipowner had a right to insist on carrying on the same cargo; it appearing that he had been willing to take a fresh cargo on fresh terms, it was the duty of pltfs. to have ascertained what those terms were, so as to diminish the loss as much as possible, before comparing the loss on the damaged cargo at B., & that from the sale of it a C., & shipping a fresh one. The coal having been used for a particular purpose, was not a reason for estimating its value at that of coal ordinarily used for such purpose.—THE BLENHEIM (1885), 10 P. D. 167; 54 L. J. S. handed the bill of lading to deft.'s house at Glasgow, defendant having one also at Lima, who made thereon an advance to S.; the goods were consigned to deft. by S. for sale. S. did not pay the freight in the month; & pltf. wrote to the master, informing him of this, & desiring him not to deliver the goods without payment of freight. Deft. at Lima demanded the goods; but the master, who had received the letter at Lima, refused to deliver them without payment of freight:—Held: the master was justified in detaining them, the lien for freight as against the consignee not being waived by the terms of the bill of lading.—NEISH v. GRAHAM (1857), 8 E. & B. 505; 27 L. By a letter signed "Ind Coope & Co., Ltd., by W., receiver & manager," defts. were instructed to carry to Malta a quantity of beer consigned to the co. c/o the co.'s agents at Malta. Defts. carried the beer to Malta under a bill of lading which named the co. as the consignees & provided that the shipowner should have a lien on the goods shipped not only for the freight due thereon but also for any previously unsatisfied freight "due either from shippers or consignees to the shipowner." Defts. for many years had carried beer for the co. to Malta under bills of lading in this form, & they claimed a lien on the beer in question for certain unsatisfied freight due to them from the co. before pltf.'s appointment:—Held: (1) defts. were not entitled to a lien for arrears of freight, because in truth pltf. & not the co. was both shipper & consignee, & notice of this fact was conveyed to defts. by the form of the shipping instructions.

4098. Part freight payable by bill—Before delivery.]—By charterparty between deft., owner of a ship, & G. deft. granted & to freight let, & G. took & to freight hired the ship for the voyage. Deft. covenanted that the master should receive on board at London, goods to be sent alongside by G., & deliver them from alongside at Newfoundland, according to bills of lading, there receive, & deliver at Demerara other goods, in like manner, & there, in like manner, receive other goods, & deliver them in the London docks, according to bills of lading; & that the ship's boats should assist in loading & unloading, so as the exclusive duties & operations of the ship should not be thereby impeded. In consideration whereof G. covenanted to send & take from alongside goods, & to pay for the freight & hire of the ship for the voyage £2,600, with primage, etc., one quarter part thereof on delivery of goods at Newfoundland, by good bills at sixty days' sight on London, & the remainder by good bills at two months' date from the day of the ship's report inwards at the port of London. The voyage was performed, & goods of third persons brought from Demerara under bills of lading, deliverable to the consignees on payment of certain specified freights therein mentioned, which freights deft. received, no bill for the three-quarters freight per charterparty having been given or tendered to him, & a bill for one quarter given at Newfoundland having been dishonoured:—Held: (1) notwithstanding the words of grant, taking the whole charterparty into consideration, the possession of the ship did not pass to the freighter, but remained in the owner; &, as the freight per charterparty was to be paid to him by good bills, prior to the delivery of the homeward cargo, he had a lien thereon for such freight; (2) he had a right to receive the freight per bills of lading from the consignees, & had a like lien on such freight when so received.—CHRISTIE v. LEWIS (1821), 2 Brod. & Bing. 410; 5 Moore, C. 4100. —— ——.]—By a memorandum of charter, made at Liverpool, it was agreed that the ship should load a cargo there, & proceed to China, & there deliver the same agreeably to bills of lading, & afterwards load a full cargo of tea or other lawful merchandise for Liverpool or London, & deliver the same to the charterers or their assigns, they paying freight for the same at the rate of £7 10*s.* per ton of 50 cubic feet for tea delivered, for the round out & home; other goods if shipped, to pay in customary proportion; in consideration whereof, the outward cargo to be carried freight free: payment to become due & to be made as follows: £800 on sailing, by charterers' acceptance at three months' date, & the balance on the unloading & delivery of the cargo, by approved bills on London at two months' date, or cash: "the master to sign bills of lading at such rates of freight as may be required by the agents of the charterers, without prejudice to this charterparty; & the owners to have an absolute lien upon the cargo for the recovery of all freight, dead-freight, demurrage, etc., due the ship under this charterparty." By another memorandum, indorsed on the above, Singapore was substituted for China; & it was agreed, that, on delivery of the cargo in Singapore, the freighters' agents there should have the option of loading the ship for London or Liverpool, or for China; that, in the event of the vessel returning from Singapore, the freight for the round should be £3,375 in full; that, should the vessel proceed to China, the freighters should pay an additional freight of 30*s.* per ton on the homeward cargo from thence, for the privilege of carrying intermediate freight from Singapore to China; & an acceptance at three months for £900 on the ship's sailing from Liverpool, was substituted for £800. The ship was laden by the charterers chiefly as a general ship; but they shipped on their own account goods for which the master signed bills of lading making the goods deliverable at Singapore to M. & co., or assigns, paying freight as per margin: in the margin, the freight, in the aggregate, £196 12*s.*, was declared to be "payable in Liverpool one month after sailing of vessel, lost or not lost." The vessel sailed from Liverpool on Feb. 21, 1856, & the charterers gave their acceptance at three months for £900 which became due on May 23, & was dishonoured: —Held: the owners had a lien upon the goods so shipped by the charterers, for the amount of the bill of lading freight, as against the consignees, M. & co., who had advanced money to the consignors upon the shipment; but not for the £900.—GILKISON v. MIDDLETON (1857), 2 C. 4101. —— ——.]—M. chartered deft.'s ship to carry a cargo of coal to Alexandria, where the same was to be delivered on freight being paid; & the charterparty stipulated "the freight to be paid on unloading & right delivery of the cargo less advances, in cash, at current rate of exchange; one-half of the freight to be advanced by freighter's acceptance at three months on signing bills of lading; owner to insure the amount & deposit with charterer the policy, & to guarantee the same." M. accordingly gave his acceptance for the half freight, & a receipt on account of such freight as per charterparty was indorsed on the bill of lading, which bill of lading was signed by the captain & afterwards duly indorsed to pltf. for value. On the arrival of the ship at Alexandria, M. having in the meantime become insolvent, the master refused to deliver the cargo to pltf. unless the whole of the freight was paid or guaranteed, although the acceptance given by M. was not then due. A guarantee was then given by one B. for pltf. under protest, & the cargo was delivered, & B. being afterwards compelled to pay the amount of such guarantee on the dishonour of M.'s acceptance, pltf. repaid him:—Held: pltf. was entitled to recover the half freight from deft., as during the currency of M.'s acceptance deft. had no lien for it, & the refusal to deliver the cargo was therefore wrongful. —TAMVACO v. SIMPSON (1866), L. 4113. Lien only for bill of lading freight—No notice of charterparty.]—S. & W. chartered a ship from Liverpool to Calcutta & home for the sum of £7,000. "The freight to be paid £1,250 on vessel clearing from Liverpool, & £1,000 on delivery of the outward cargo at Calcutta, the remainder in cash two months from the vessel's report inwards, & after right delivery of the cargo, or under discount at 5 per cent. per annum at freighter's option. The master to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight required without prejudice to his charterparty. The owners of the ship to have an absolute lien on the cargo for all freight, dead freight & demurrage." There were provisions for payment of the freight in cash on delivery of the cargo, if the cargo was delivered abroad. S. & C. who were the charterer's agents at Calcutta, having made advances to disburse the vessel, shipped a quantity of linseed, for which the captain signed bills of lading deliverable to their order or assigns on payment of freight at 5*s.* per ton, the current rate being £5 10*s.* Against this shipment S. & C. drew a bill of exchange & indorsed & delivered it together with the bill of lading for value:—Held: (1) assuming the charterparty to have created a lien for the charterparty freight as against the charterer, a bonâ fide indorsee of the bill of lading, without notice of the charterparty, was entitled to the linseed on payment of the bill of lading freight; (2) the charterparty did not create any lien in respect of that part of the freight which was payable at two months after the vessel's report inwards.—FOSTER v. COLBY (1858), 3 H. & N. 705; 28 L. C. Holder Identified in Interest with Charterer.

4115. Whether lien for whole chartered freight—Charterer indebted to consignees.]—By a charterparty, freight was agreed to be paid for the use or hire of the ship at a certain rate per ton, for a voyage out & home, in manner following, viz.: a certain sum in advance on the ship's clearing outwards, & the residue half in cash & half in approved bills, upon the delivery of the homeward cargo; the owner also appointed S. master, at the request of the charterer, who executed a bond, conditioned for the faithful performance of the master's duty; & the owner expressly instructed S. to be careful to sign all bills of lading with the clause, "Freight payable, as by charterparty." The ship was consigned to C. & co., in Calcutta, by whom she was put up, for her homeward voyage, as a general ship, & different merchants shipped goods by her, C. & co. taking for homeward freight bills payable sixty days after delivery of the cargo; & a new master having been appointed by C. & co., in conjunction with S., signed bills of lading with the clause, "Payable freight agreeable to freight bill." The freight bills were made payable in London to B. & co. to whom the charterer was indebted for advances on the outward cargo, & who, as well as C. & co., were cognisant of the terms of the charterparty:—Held: (1) the owner of the ship had a lien on these goods to the extent of the homeward freight.

C. & co. also put on board the ship goods purchased by them on account of the charterer; but he being indebted to them, & B. & co. their agents, those goods were by the bill of lading consigned to B. & co.:—Held: (2) as between the owner of the ship & B. & co. the goods were to be considered as the goods of the charterer, & liable to the owner's lien on them for the freight due by charterparty. (3) In the charterparty, the freighter promised to pay & defray two-thirds of the port charges: the owner having paid the whole was held to have no lien on the goods shipped for those charges.—FAITH v. EAST INDIA CO. At the end of the charterparty was the following clause:—"The captain to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight, without prejudice to this charter. In the event of a less freight, the bills of lading of part of the cargo to be filled up for loss, if any." Under this charterparty, the charterers shipped at Penang goods as their own, for which the captain signed bills of lading at a certain specified rate of freight. The goods so shipped were consigned for sale to pltfs., the correspondents of the charters in London, who were under a general engagement to honour bills drawn upon them by the charterers, upon the faith of consignments to be made to meet them, & who were largely in advance at the time of the shipment in question:—Held: the owners had a lien upon the goods for the entire lump freight.—GLEDSTANES v. ALLEN (1852), 12 C. B., the charterer, shipped certain oil on his own account for London, for which the master signed a bill of lading making the oil deliverable to A. or assigns, "he or they paying freight for the said goods as usual." A person who, without notice of any charterparty, has placed goods on board a vessel which has been advertised as a general ship, is entitled to have his goods returned to him if the captain refuses to sign bills of lading except subject to a charterparty containing objectionable provisions. A Norwegian vessel was advertised as a general ship by C. & co., an English firm, described in the advertisement as brokers. Pltfs. entered into an agreement with C. & co. for the carriage of certain goods at a stipulated rate of freight, & placed the goods on board before they had notice of any charterparty affecting the ship. It afterwards proved that C. & co. were charterers of the vessel under a charterparty, which provided that the owner should have a lien for freight, dead freight, & demurrage. The captain refused to sign bills of lading, except subject to the charterparty, or to return the goods to pltfs.:—Held: the owners of the ship were not entitled to retain the goods in satisfaction of their claims under the charterparty, pltfs. were entitled to have the goods delivered to them free from any claim by the owners.—PEEK v. LARSEN (1871), L. 4160. Origin of right.]—(1) A loss by general average is to be calculated between owner of ship & the owner of goods according to the law of the port of discharge.

(2) The principle of general average, namely, that all whose property has been saved by the sacrifice of the property of another shall contribute to make good his loss, is of very ancient date, & of universal reception among commercial nations (ABBOT, C.J.).—SIMONDS v. WHITE (1824), 2 B. & C. 805; 4 Dow. & Ry. 4163. ——.]—Pltfs. shipped certain cattle as a deck cargo on board deft.'s vessel; during the voyage a storm arose, & owing to stress of weather the master jettisoned the deck cargo by throwing the cattle overboard. The act of jettison was proper & necessary on the part of the master for the safety of deft.'s vessel:—Held: pltfs. could not recover from the defts. a general average contribution, for the loss of the cattle.

It is not necessary to say what is the origin or principle of the rule, but, to judge from the way it is claimed in England, it would seem to arise from an implied contract inter se to contribute "by those interested." To this rule there is an exception, viz., deck cargo jettisoned is not entitled to general average contribution. . . . To this exception, however, there are two exceptions . . . viz. that coasting vessels are without the exception, & also those cases where by custom the deck cargo is one customary in the trade & perhaps also from the port (BRAMWELL L.J.).—WRIGHT v. MARWOOD (1881), 7 Q. 4165. ——.]—(1) The right of contribution in respect of jettisoned cargo is based on the danger to ship & cargo requiring sacrifice to which all must contribute.

(2) Such right does not belong to the wrongdoers whose acts have led to the jettison, or to those who are legally responsible for them.

(3) Where a ship is stranded through the negligence of her master, & thereby ship & cargo are placed in a position of such imminent danger as to make it prudent & necessary to jettison part of the cargo in order to save the remainder & the ship:—Held: innocent owners of the jettisoned cargo are entitled to general average; (4) secus with regard to the owners of the ship unless their ordinary relations to the shippers have been varied by contract. (5) The rules of maritime law relating to the rights & remedies resulting from a proper case of jettison are:—Each owner of jettisoned goods becomes a creditor of ship & cargo saved; he has a direct claim against each of the owners of ship & cargo for a pro rata contribution towards his indemnity, which he can recover (a) by direct action; (b) by enforcing through the ship master, who is his agent for that purpose, a lien on each parcel of goods salved to answer its proportionate liability.

(6) There are two well-established exceptions to the rule of contribution for general average. . . . When a person who would otherwise have been entitled to claim contribution has, by his own fault occasioned the peril which mediately gave rise to the claim, it would be manifestly unjust to permit him to recover from those whose goods are saved. . . . The second exception is in the case of deck cargo. . . . According to the rules of maritime lien, the placing of goods upon the deck of a sea-going ship is improper stowage, because they are hindrances to the safe navigation of the vessel; & their jettison is therefore regarded . . . as a justifiable riddance of incumbrances which ought never to have been there. . . . But the exception does not apply, either (a) in those cases where, according to the established custom of navigation, such cargoes are permitted or (b) in any case where the other owners of cargo have consented that the goods jettisoned should be carried on the deck of the ship (LORD WATSON).

(7) The rule of contribution in cases of jettison has its origin in the maritime law of Rhodes (LORD WATSON).—STRANG, STEEL & CO. v. SCOTT (A.) & CO. (1889), 14 App. Cas. 601; 5 T. L. In order to give rise to a charge as general average, it is essential that there should be a voluntary sacrifice to preserve more subjects than one exposed to a common jeopardy, but an extraordinary expenditure incurred for that purpose is as much a sacrifice as if, instead of money being expended for the purpose, money's worth were thrown away (BLACKBURN, J.).—KEMP v. HALLIDAY (1865), 6 B. & S. 723; 34 L. 4175. —— ——.]—Shippers chartered a ship to carry a cargo of coals from Cardiff to Esquimault. In the course of the voyage the coal heated to such an extent that if the ship had continued her voyage the ship & cargo would have been totally lost. The master, for the safety of all concerned, put into a port of refuge & landed the coal, which was subsequently surveyed & found to be in such a condition as to be incapable of being carried with safety to its destination. The master accordingly abandoned the voyage, & the chartered freight was lost:—Held: the freight had not been sacrificed under such circumstances as to make the loss the subject of general average contribution.

To constitute a general average loss so as to be the subject of a general average contribution, two things at least must co-exist: (a) there must be an intentional sacrifice of part of the ship or cargo, or a voluntary expenditure for the benefit of the ship & cargo; (b) such sacrifice or expenditure must be made at the time when a common danger to ship & cargo existed, for when the common danger has ceased there can be no sacrifice or expenditure that can be the subject of a general average contribution (A. 4176. —— ——.]—The rule as to what constitutes a general average or not is founded upon the consideration whether it is for the benefit of all who are or may be interested in the accomplishment of the voyage, or only for the benefit of a particular party (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).

Sect. 14.—General average: Sub-sect. 2, A. & B.]

The phrase " general average " . . . is used in contra-distinction to particular average. It means a voluntary sacrifice for the benefit of the voyage, & not merely an involuntary encounter of a loss without action or design. It looks to the efficient cause of the loss, & not to the effects of it. It looks to the consideration whether the act is intended for the benefit of all concerned in the voyage, & not in particular to the consideration who are to contribute towards the indemnity (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).—MONTGOMERY & Co. v. INDEMNITY MUTUAL MARINE INSURANCE Co., [1902] 1 K. 4177. —— Extraordinary sacrifice.]—An action upon premises lies by a shipowner to recover from the owner of the cargo his proportion of general average loss incurred by sacrificing the tackle belonging to a ship for an unusual purpose, or on an extraordinary occasion of danger, for the benefit of the whole concern.

All loss which arises in consequence of extraordinary sacrifices made or expenses incurred for the preservation of the ship & cargo come within general average & must be borne proportionably by all who are interested (LAWRENCE, J.).—BIRKLEY v. PRESGRAVE (1801), 1 East, 220; 102 E. R. 86.

4184. —— To avoid extraordinary & abnormal perils.]—In pursuance of a charterparty a sailing vessel left San Francisco for Queenstown, & was there ordered to Sharpness in the Bristol Channel. The usual practice for a sailing vessel going from Queenstown to Sharpness is for her to be towed a short distance out of Queenstown & a short distance into Sharpness. The master of the vessel hired a Dutch tug to tow her the whole way from Queenstown to Sharpness, being of opinion that that course was necessary owing to the presence of enemy submarines in the neighbourhood. In hiring the tug the master acted on his own judgment & responsibility. Although the vessel passed through waters in which she anticipated submarines, she did not see one, & of vessels alleged to have been sunk or damaged in the waters through which she passed on her voyage three-quarters were steamships. The vessel always used a tug when entering or leaving port. In an action brought by the owners of the vessel against the owners of the cargo for a general average contribution in respect of the hire of the tug:—Held: the claim could not be sustained, inasmuch as a general average expenditure must be incurred to avoid extraordinary, & abnormal perils as distinguished from the ordinary & normal perils of the sea, & the risk of being attacked or destroyed by the King's enemies was not an extraordinary & abnormal peril upon a voyage of the kind during the war.—SOCIÉTÉ NOUVELLE D'ARMEMENT v. SPILLERS & BAKERS, LTD., [1917] 1 K. 4195. —— Abnormal pumping operations—Ships' stores used as fuel.]—Pltf.'s ship sailed from Melbourne for London, having on board, as is usual with sailing vessels on this voyage, a donkey engine, which was equivalent to ten additional men, & without which, or the ten additional men, she would not have been seaworthy. The engine was used for pumping & also for other ship's purposes. The ship had on board a sufficient stock of coals for an ordinary voyage, & was expressly found to be seaworthy. On Mar. 10 she encountered bad weather, which continued till Apr. 1, & then moderated. During this time she strained, & made much water, & she continued afterwards to leak; the water could only be kept under by pumping, & for this purpose it was necessary to use the engine, without which she could not have been kept afloat. On Apr. 16 the stock of coals was refuced to one & a half tons, & the captain, in order to obtain fuel, directed some spare spars & wood, which were part of the ship's stores, to be cut up to burn with the coal; wood alone would not have sufficed to get up the steam. On May 5 the ship obtained some coal from a passing vessel, & on May 16 put into port to obtain a further supply. On arriving in the Thames the engine broke down fron overwork. The ship was exposed to no serious risk from the water she made while there was sufficient fuel on board to work the engine. Pltf. claimed from defts., who were owners of cargo, a general average contribution in respect of (1) the spars & wood; (b) the extra coal; & (c) the injury to the donkey engine:—Held: (KELLY, C.B. & BRAMWELL, B.) the facts showed an imminent peril requiring the sacrifice of the spars & wood, & pltf. was therefore entitled to a general average contribution in respect of them; but he was not so entitled in respect of the coal or the injury to the donkey engine. (2) (MARTIN & CLEASBY, BB.), no such emergency had occurred as to entitle pltf. to a general average contribution in respect of any of the above matters.—HARRISON v. BANK OF AUSTRALASIA (1872), L. 4201. —— ——.]—Whilst on a voyage to H., a vessel met with a storm, which caused parts of the rigging to give way: the mainmast in consequence began to lurch violently, & was cut away by the captain's orders; if the mast had not been cut away, it would, in all probability have fallen overboard in a few minutes, & in so doing might have torn up the decks & caused the vessel to founder; the vessel having outlived the storm, was repaired at a port of refuge, & proceeded on her voyage to H., where she delivered her cargo. An action having been brought by the owners of the vessel against the owners of the cargo for a general average contribution for the loss of the mast, at the trial the judge asked the jury whether at the time when the mast was cut away it was virtually a wreck & valueless; but he did not ask them to find whether if the weather had moderated the mast could possibly have been saved, nor did he ask them to find whether the mast was cut away to save the adventure, or as a mere incumbrance:—Held: a proper direction.—SHEPHERD v. KOTTGEN (1877), 2 C. cargo on board would in all probability have been destroyed, & the ship seriously damaged. Pltf.'s bark was destroyed by the water poured into the ship. In an action for general average contribution in respect of the destruction of pltf.'s bark, it was found, in addition to the above facts, that it is the practice of British average adjusters to treat a loss so caused as not a general average loss:—Held: whether or not the loss was, according to the general law of England, the subject of general average contribution, pltf., by the terms of the bill of lading, had made the admitted practice of British average adjusters part of the contract, & he was bound by it, even if different from British law.—STEWART v. WEST INDIA & PACIFIC S.S. 4226. —— Scuttling of ship.]—Damage to cargo by scuttling a ship to put out a fire is the subject of general average contribution.

There is no valid custom excluding the loss from general average.

Pltf. chartered a ship from deft., & by the charterparty it was provided, "all questions of general average to be settled according to the custom of the London underwriters at Lloyd's." A fire broke out on board, the ship was scuttled to extinguish it, & the cargo was damaged thereby. The loss was adjusted as general average, & pltf. brought his action to recover from deft. the ship's contribution. The judge directed the jury that the loss was general average according to law, & the question was whether there was a valid custom excluding such loss from general average. The jury found that no such custom existed, & the verdict was entered for pltf.—ACHARD v. RING (1874), 31 L. T. 647; 2 Asp. M. L. C. 422.

4227. —— ——.]—To pour water upon the cargo pursuant to the master's orders for the purpose of extinguishing a fire which has broken out in a ship's hold, is a general average act, & if the cargo is thereby injured, the owner is entitled to a contribution. Whilst the cargo remains on board a ship after her arrival at the port of destination, the maritime adventure is not terminated so as to absolve the owners of the cargo & the ship from mutual rights & liabilities.

Defts. were the owners of the H., which having arrived at her port of destination at the end of a voyage, unloaded about 1300 tons of her cargo; about 100 tons remained on board. Whilst she was lying at a wharf, a fire broke out in her hold, & in order to extinguish it her master caused water to be poured into her, whereby some goods, forming part of the cargo & belonging to pltfs., were damaged. The H. might have been scuttled & raised again; but if the fire had not been extinguished, she would have been in peril of partial destruction:—Held: defts. were liable to contribute by way of general average for the damage done to pltf.'s goods.

It has been said that defts. vessel might have been scuttled; but the expense of raising & repairing her would have entitled her owners to a general average contribution (BRETT, L.J.).—WHITECROSS WIRE CO., LTD. v. SAVILL (1882), 8 Q. realised net a larger sum than if they had safely reached their destination; but the freight upon them was wholly lost:—Held: (1) the shipowner was entitled to a contribution in general average for the lost freight.

(2) Semble: there was no claim on account of the cargo; first, because there was no loss on account of it; secondly, because the vice in it was the cause of the sacrifice.

Bows tipped for rudder repairs.]—A ship, laden with a perishable cargo which could not by any means be discharged, having on her voyage become unnavigable & incapable of moving through damage to her propeller, is, with her cargo, in peril, although the ship be tight & strong & the cargo sound. If tipping the ship head down to repair her propeller be resorted to, & in the course of the operation a portion of the cargo be damaged by salt water, the cargo owners have a right to a general average contribution. The operation of so tipping the ship is under the circumstances a general average act, & the loss a general average & not a particular average loss.—MCCALL & CO. v. HOULDER (1897), 66 L. J. Q. Depreciation in value of cargo—Vessel putting into intermediate port for repairs—Port subject to embargo—Unloading at destination prohibited.]—Pltfs. shipped a deck cargo of cattle & sheep on board defts.' ship for carriage from Buenos Ayres to Deptford under a contract which provided that the ship should on no account call at a Brazilian port before landing her live stock. The reason for this provision was that by an order of the Board of Agriculture foreign animals could not be landed in the United Kingdom if the ship conveying them had touched at a Brazilian port in the course of her voyage. During the voyage the ship sprung a leak, & the master, for the safety of all concerned, put into a Brazilian port for repairs. Pltfs. thereby suffered loss in consequence of the live stock being unable to be landed in the United Kingdom, & having to be sold elsewhere at lower prices than would have been realised in the English market. The master at the time when he resolved to put into the Brazilian port knew that this would be the result of his so doing:—Held: the depreciation of the live stock was a loss which pltfs. were entitled to have made good in general average.—ANGLO-ARGENTINE LIVE STOCK & PRODUCE AGENCY v. TEMPERLEY SHIPPING CO., [1899] 2 Q. The vessel put into ports of refuge in such circumstances that, under the terms of the charterparty, hire continued to run, & the owners had to pay for wages & provisions during the period of detention. The owners recovered contribution from cargo in respect of wages & provisions:—Held: there being no clause in the charterparty giving the charterers the right to such contribution, they were not entitled to recover it from the shipowners.—HOWDEN & CO. v. S.S. Ship delayed for damage itself subject of general average.]—By a time charter it was provided that in the event of loss of time from damage preventing the working of the vessel for more than twenty-four hours the payment of hire should cease until she should be again in an efficient state to resume her service. Whilst loading a cargo of coals under a sub-charter, a fire broke out on board the ship, & certain refrigerating machinery wit which she was fitted was damaged by water used to extinguish it, necessitating repairs which occupied thirty-one days. In an action brought by the shipowners against underwriters to recover a general average contribution in respect of the loss of hire during the time the damage by water was being repaired:—Held: such contribution could not be recovered.

There appear to me to be strong reasons for holding that at any rate wherever the delay is to repair damage, which is itself the subject of general average, the wages & maintenance of the crew during such delay should be allowed by law in general average (GORELL BARNES, J.).—THE LEITRIM, [1902] P. 256 ; 71 L. The question whether extraordinary expenditure after the entry into a port of refuge is rightly chargeable to general average, necessarily depends on the circumstances of each case. . . . The first test is whether such item itself fulfils, as against some or all of the interest to be considered, the definition of a general average sacrifice; the second is whether such item, though not itself a general average sacrifice, is nevertheless an expenditure caused or rendered necessary by one (BOWEN, L.J.).

(c) Expenses occasioned by Stranding.

4269. Refloating ship—After cargo safely removed.]—By a case stated between assured & underwriters on ship, it appeared that the ship, having sailed from Liverpool with a cargo on board, ran on shore, accidentally on the coast of Ireland. In order to get her off it became necessary to discharge the whole of the cargo, which was accordingly taken out & placed in store at Dublin. The ship was then got off by digging a channel for her, & employing a steam tug, & was towed to Liverpool to be repaired. The cargo was shipped in another vessel, & forwarded to its destination; but, for the purposes of the case, was to be considered as having been carried on by the original ship after she had been repaired:—Held: the expenses incurred, after the cargo was in safety, in getting off the ship & towing her to Liverpool for repair were not chargeable to general average, but to ship alone.

We do not say that there may not be a case where, after a fortuitous stranding of the ship & the cargo has been unloaded, expense voluntarily incurred by the owner of the ship to get her off, & to enable her to complete the voyage, whereby the cargo, which otherwise must have perished, is carried to its destination, may be general average (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.).—JOB v. LANGTON (1856), 6 E. & B. 779; 26 L. The shipowner despatched his manager & other persons to take part in the necessary salvage operations, & the whole of the cargo was saved, transhipped, & brought forward to London, & the freight earned. Part of the cargo which could not be identified was sold by the shipowner by arrangement with the consignees through a broker, who received his brokerage. The shipowner incurred considerable trouble in chartering ships to carry on the cargo from France to London, & in sending out lighters & necessary appliances to France, & in the identification of the cargo, preparing for the sale, answering the inquiries of & arranging with the consignees. In the average statement a remuneration to the shipowner for "arranging for salvage operations, receiving cargo, meeting & arranging with consignees, & receiving & paying proceeds, & generally conducting the business," was charged partly to general average, & partly as particular average on the several interests rateably, the average stater thinking that the amount was a reasonable remuneration to the shipowner for his services & for commission on the sale of unidentified cargo, & on disbursements:—Held: under the circumstances the amount was improperly charged & could not be recovered, there being no contract on the part of the owners of the cargo to remunerate the shipowner for his services, a great part of which had been rendered with the object of earning his freight.—SCHUSTER v. FLETCHER (1878), 3 Q. Where such a disaster happens there is no rigid rule of law that the shipowner may not employ experienced persons to act in his place for the benefit of all concerned. 4294. Liability for non-enforcement—By shipowner—Action for damages.]—A shipowner, where a general average loss has occurred, may be liable to an action for damages for delivering up the cargo without taking the necessary steps for procuring an adjustment of the general average & securing its payment.

Pltfs. shipped goods at Liverpool on board a steamer belonging to defts. under a bill of lading, by which defts. undertook to deliver the goods at the port of Montreal unto the Grand Trunk Railway, by them to be forwarded, upon the condition before & after expressed, thence per railway to the station nearest to Toronto, etc., & among the conditions was the following: "The shipowner or railway co. are not to be liable for any damage to any goods which is capable of being covered by insurance, etc."

In the course of the voyage pltfs.' goods sustained damage which came under the heading of general average. The ship returned to Liverpool, & the cargo was discharged & handed over by defts. to a co. to be distributed & disposed of for the benefit of the parties concerned, without giving any assistance to the bailees, the underwriters, or the persons whose goods were damaged to get an average statement made out, or taking any steps to enable pltfs. to recover contribution:—Held: the bill of lading did not relieve deft. from contribution to general average, &, they were liable to an action by pltfs. for their omission to take the necessary steps to secure an adjustment & payment of the general average.

The office of the bill of lading is to provide for the rights & liabilities of the parties in reference to the contract to carry & is not concerned with liabilites to contribution in general average (LUSH, J.).

If a shipowner wishes to introduce into his bill of lading so novel a clause as one exempting him from general average contribution, a clause which not only deprives the shipper of an ancient & well-understood right, but which might avoid his policy & deprive him also of recourse to the underwriter, he ought not only to make it clear in words, but also to make it conspicuous by inserting it in such type & in such a part of the document as that a person of ordinary capacity & care could not fail to see it. A bill of lading is not the contract, but only the evidence of the contract (LUSH, J.).

The right to detain for average contribution is derived from the civil law, which also imposes on the master of the ship the duty of having the contribution settled & of collecting the amount, & the 4303. —— Total loss before voyage terminated—After average expenditure incurred—York-Antwerp Rules.]—By York-Antwerp Rules, 1890, r. 17, the contribution to a general average act shall be made upon the actual values of the property at the termination of the adventure.

A ship left Cuba with a cargo of sugar under bills of lading whereby the cargo was to be carried to Queenstown for orders & to be delivered to named consignees at the port of destination. The bills of lading provided that general average should be payable according to York-Antwerp rules.

On her way from Cuba to Queenstown the ship sustained damage to her hull & engines, & the master put into a port of refuge in the Azores where he incurred expenses for maintenance & wages of officers & crew & for port charges. By rr. 10 & 11 of the York-Antwerp rules these are to be admitted as general average expenses. Soon after leaving the port of refuge the ship & cargo were totally lost at sea by fire.

The shipowner claimed contribution in general average from the consignee of the cargo :—Held : the claim failed, inasmuch as at the termination of the adventure, namely, on the loss of the ship & cargo, the cargo had no value. Qu. : whether the claim would have succeeded apart from the York-Antwerp rules.—CHELLEW v. ROYAL COMMISSION ON SUGAR SUPPLY, [1922] 1 K. A consignee, who is the absolute owner of the goods, is liable to pay general average, because the law throws upon him that liability (LORD TENTERDEN, C.J.).—SCAIFE v. TOBIN (1832), 3 B. & Ad. 523; 1 L. J. K. B. 183; 110 E. R. 189.

The ship after some days was got off & returned to port & when she had been repaired the goods were reshipped & carried forward to their destination without any interference of the owner of them :—Held : (1) the landing of the goods was part of the continuous operation for getting the ship off & sending her back to port, there to be repaired, with a view to prosecute the original adventure, & the goods & chartered freight must both contribute in general average with the ship to the expenses necessarily incurred in getting her off after the goods were landed; (2) if the goods had not remained liable, the freight must still have contributed to this general average with the ship.—MORAN v. JONES (1857), 7 E. & B. 523; 26 L. The freight, to the extent of £4,807, was paid in advance, & a general average loss was sustained on the voyage:—Held: the owners were not liable to contribute to such general average in respect of the freight so advanced, but only in respect of the £800 which was to be paid at the end of the voyage; but the charterers, who had an insurable interest in that portion of the freight were the parties to contribute.—FRAYES v. WORMS (1865), 19 C. They contemplated that she would be damaged in so doing & would strike a pier of the docks, but it was a lesser risk than trying to beach her would have been, & was a reasonable & prudent thing to do in the interests of ship & cargo. She succeeded in entering the docks, but in so doing damaged both herself & the pier. The shipowners claimed contribution in general average from the owners of the cargo in respect of both items of damage:—Held: (1) the taking of the ship into the docks was a general average act; (2) the damage to the ship was a general average sacrifice & the damage to the pier a general average expenditure, & the cargo owners must contribute in respect of both items; (3) the common law rule that there is no contribution between joint tortfeasors was not applicable in general average.—AUSTIN FRIARS S.S. 4320. Release of goods on consignee's security—Security must be reasonable.]—Where a shipowner in the exercise of his lien for general average requires security from the owner of the cargo liable to contribution without insisting upon immediate payment of the amount due, the security so required must be reasonable. Defts., who had a lien upon goods on board their ship for general average, did not demand payment of the amount due, but required as security that the consignees should make a deposit of 10 per cent. on the estimated value of the goods in the joint names of defts. & their average adjuster, or in the names of defts., or in the name of the average adjuster, or should execute a bond providing that the deposit should be held as a security for the general average & particular charges, & that the parties in whose name it stood might pay thereout such sums as they should from time to time consider ought to be paid to the owners or master on account of money actually disbursed by them or him, or to enable them or him to pay off & discharge claims which formed part of the general average & other expenses. It also provided that all questions of general average should be referred to the average adjuster of the shipowner, subject to an appeal from the adjustment to arbitrators, whose decision should be final :—Held : the conditions of the deposit & the form of the bond were both unreasonable, & could not in the circumstances be imposed upon the consignees.—HUTH & Co. v. LAMPORT, GIBBS & SON v. LAMPORT (1886), 16 Q. 4326. Amount of contribution—Principles of assessment.]—In ascertaining the general average contribution to be paid by the shipowner in respect of goods jettisoned, the value of such goods is to be taken to be the sum which it may fairly be assumed they would have been worth to the owner at the port of adjustment. If, from the circumstances, & the damaged condition of the rest of the cargo, it may fairly be assumed that the jettisoned goods would, if they had not been thrown overboard, have arrived in the like damaged condition, their value is to be taken to be the sum they would have realised as damaged goods. A ship sailed from Liverpool for Calcutta with 2,000 tons of salt on board, all belonging to one merchant. The day after she sailed, the ship struck on a bank on the Irish coast, &, after throwing overboard 1,000 tons of the salt, was got off & put back to Liverpool, where the remainder of the cargo was unloaded & found to be all, with the exception of about 100 tons, so damaged as to be nearly unfit to be forwarded, & worthless. The charterer had paid £1,250 in advance for freight. In an action by the owner against an underwriter on the ship, to recover a general average contribution in respect of the salt so jettisoned, upon a case stated for the opinion of the ct. as to the principle by which the average stater was to be guided in ascertaining the value of the jettisoned goods :—Held : in ascertaining the contribution to be paid by the shipowner to the owner of the cargo, in respect of the salt jettisoned, it was to be valued at the price which it would have been worth at Liverpool had it been brought back there, the average stater taking into account the probability of its arriving at the port of adjustment in a sound or a damaged state, or in a state in which it could have been forwarded, so as to take advantage of the prepaid freight.

(2) The whole law on the subject is founded on the principle that the loss to the individual whose goods are sacrificed for the benefit of the rest is to be compensated according to the loss sustained on the one hand & the benefit derived on the other (BOVILL, C.J.).

(3) The rules as to contribution & adjustment seem to me to depend upon the probable state of things at, & to have reference to, the time & place of adjustment, that is to say, when & where the adjustment ought to take place (BOVILL, C.J.). —FLETCHER v. ALEXANDER (1868), L. R. 3 C. P.

4327. —— ——.]—Pltfs. chartered their steamship, the B., to proceed to one of certain named ports in the United States, & there load a cargo for the United Kingdom or Continent, & insured "chartered homeward freight" with deft. The policy described the voyage as from Liverpool to Delaware Breakwater, & thence to Baltimore, New York, Philadelphia, or Newport News, & thence to any port in the United Kingdom or Continent, & provided that general average charges should be payable "as per foreign statement, if required." The ship left Liverpool in ballast, but, having met with bad weather, her tanks were found to be leaking, & she had to put into Holyhead, where certain expenses were incurred. She afterwards returned to Liverpool, where she was repaired, & subsequently proceeded on the chartered voyage & loaded a cargo at Baltimore, which she carried to Barrow & there delivered. None of the expenses at Holyhead or Liverpool were incurred for the preservation of ship & freight. An average statement was subsequently prepared, according to what were alleged to be the provisions of American law, showing general average expenses at Holyhead & Liverpool, which were apportioned as between ship & freight. In an action by pltfs. to recover from deft. in respect of a general average loss under the policy on chartered freight:—Held: deft. was not liable.

The contribution is based on the benefit derived from the sacrifice by each interest, in other words, on the values saved, in the case of freight, this is the amount of freight at risk, minus the expenses of earning it which would have been saved if the ship had been lost (GORELL BARNES, J.).—THE BRIGELLA, [1893] P. 189; 62 L. 4337. —— Evidence of trade usage—Implied term in contract between shipowner & cargo owner.]—A long-continued practice of average adjusters who prepare their statements according to the law as laid down by the cts. is no evidence of such a custom or usage of trade as can be impliedly incorporated in a contract between a shipowner & owner of cargo.

Defts. who were the owners of cargo in an action against them by the shipowner to recover a general average contribution in respect of expenses caused by the ship putting into a port of refuge, landing, storing, & reshipping the cargo, & leaving the port, alleged a custom of trade that in such a case the expenses incurred in & about warehousing the cargo were apportioned among the owners of the cargo alone, & the expenses of reshipping the cargo, port dues, etc., were borne by the owners of the ship & freight.

Several witnesses were called who gave evidence to the effect that for sixty or seventy years the practice of average adjusters had been as stated by defts., but that, in consequence of the decision in Atwood v. Sellar, No. 4332, ante, some average adjusters had altered their mode of adjustment in such a case:—Held: this was not evidence of a custom of trade which could be left to the jury.—SVENDSON v. WALLACE (1882), 46 L. 4340. —— General & universal practice.]—Where a custom is sought to be set up giving an implied leave to a captain to stow goods on deck, it is not sufficient to prove that the practice is a frequent one. The custom must be proved to be so general & universal in the trade, & in the particular port from which the goods are taken, that every one shipping goods there must be taken to know that other people's goods, if not his goods, might probably be stowed on deck, & unless such custom is proved, a captain has no authority to bind any one by a jettison of the deck cargo.—NEWHALL v. ROYAL EXCHANGE SHIPPING CO. 4343. —— Not merely by agreement.]—There is no proved custom at the port of Sharpness that a steamer with a cargo of wood under a Baltic Steam Bristol Channel Charterparty, containing provisions that "cargo to be loaded & discharged with the customary steamer dispatch of the port, & in the ordinary working hours thereof" & "the usual custom of the wood trade of each port is to be observed by each party in cases where not specially expressed," is properly discharged if the cargo is discharged at an average rate of 90 standards per weather working day.

Such a custom would be unreasonable.

A custom cannot be established merely by three or four important classes of persons in a community of a port agreeing that it is desirable. It must be enforced (KENNEDY, J.).

A custom which gives a preference to steamers merely because they come from Baltic ports, as against vessels carrying practically the same class of goods from the other side of the Atlantic, although the steamers are identical in size & in facilities for discharge with all the advantages of modern timber carrying ships, would not be a reasonable custom (KENNEDY, J.).—SEA S.S. 4344. —— Three or four witnesses speaking to practice five years old.]—By a charterparty, A., the owner, agreed that the ship should proceed to the Tyne, & there load a cargo of coals, & proceed therewith to Algiers, & deliver the same there, on payment of certain freight. B., the charterer, engaged that the vessel should be unloaded at a certain average rate per day; & that, if detained for a longer period, he would "pay for such detention at the rate of £5 per diem, to reckon from the time of the vessel being ready to unload, & in turn to deliver." According to the general regulations of the port of Algiers, vessels may commence unloading as soon as they enter within the mole, but, by a special regulation of the French govt., coals destined for the use of the marine department are required to be unladen at a particular spot, & in a given order: Held: evidence was admissible to show that the words "in turn to deliver" had by the usage of the particular trade acquired a known meaning in reference to this special regulation with respect to coals for the use of the French marine department, although A. was not cognizant of the fact of the coals having been shipped under a contract with the French govt.; but the testimony of three or four witnesses, speaking to a course of business that had only grown up within about five years, & with reference to charterparties the language of which was not identical with that of the charterparty in question, was insufficient to establish such general usage; the special regulation as to the unloading of coals for the French marine department, was to be considered one of the regulations of the port, binding upon all vessels entering the port.—ROBERTSON v. JACKSON (1845), 2 C. 4345. —— Sufficiency of uniformity of practice—Settled & established practice.]—A steamer loaded a cargo of barley in sacks at a North Pacific port under a charterparty which provided for discharge at a port in the United Kingdom "according to the custom at port of discharge for steamers" The steamer was ordered to discharge at the Port of Leith, where the consignees demanded delivery of the barley in the original sacks. The shipowners, however, claimed the right to discharge the cargo according to a custom, which they alleged prevailed at that port with regard to cargoes of grain shipped on steamers from North Pacific ports, whereby the grain was bulked in the hold, from which it was hoisted in tubs to the deck & poured into sacks of a uniform size.

It was proved that in the last twenty years some eighty cargoes of grain from North Pacific ports had been discharged at Leith, & in every case but two the discharge had been effected by the receivers bulking the cargo in the hold. In every instance, however, the shipowners had written a formal letter protesting against being held liable for the number of sacks shipped if that method of discharge was adopted. The greater number of these cargoes had been consigned to two firms of receivers, & the evidence of both of these firms was that this method of charging esparto grass into railway wagons, adopted for the convenience of a single receiver whose consignments of esparto grass have amounted to from four to six cargoes per annum for twenty years, &, except for an occasional delivery of a small quantity into lorries for one or two other traders, comprise the whole of the esparto grass handled at the port, does not amount to a practice so certain, uniform, notorious & reasonable as to constitute a custom of the port.—CAZALET v. MORRIS & CO., S.S. discharge did not depend upon custom, but had merely been adopted by them to suit their convenience & to save expense:—Held: in spite of the uniformity of the practice, the shipowners had failed to prove a custom of port binding on the consignees.

The distinction should be made plain between a settled & established practice in the general sense of the mere occurrence of instances, many of which may have sprung from express contract, & a settled & established practice which amounts to the acceptance of a binding obligation of a custom apart from particular bargain (LORD SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE).—STRATHLORNE S.S. An alleged custom was set up to the effect that the consignee could not be required to take delivery at a faster rate than about 500 tons per day at the port of Bristol for River Plate grain cargoes. A vessel discharged a grain cargo, under the above bill of lading, at Avonmouth Dock, Bristol. The alleged custom had been a matter of dispute for years. The facilities of discharge as regard ships & the three docks in the port of Bristol had increased since the origin of the alleged custom. The rate of discharge, in fact, was often in excess of 500 tons per day:—Held: no such custom now existed at Bristol for grain steamers generally or for River Plate grain steamers. The charterparty must be read as "custom, if any, at the port of discharge." Where a custom relates directly to the obligations of parties under certain circumstances, it must, in order to be valid & to be binding on parties who do not know of the existence of the custom as a fact, be reasonable. The custom was quite inapplicable to the state of things at present existing, & there was no such settled & established practice in the port as to satisfy the words of the charterparty. If the custom applied to the altered circumstances, it was unreasonable. Contracting out of a custom may become so general as to destroy the custom. When a custom becomes the exception & not the rule, there is no longer a custom.—ROPNER & CO. v. STOATE, HOSEGOOD & CO. (1905), 92 L. T. 328; 21 T. L. R. 245; 49 Sol. Jo. 262; 10 Asp. M. L. 4348. ——.]—Defts., three separate firms of Hull timber merchants, were sued in the Hull County ct for demurrage as indorsees of bills of lading for parcels of a wood cargo carried in pltf.'s steamship to Hull. The bills of lading incorporated the terms of the charterparty, which provided that the vessel was to be discharged with customary steamship dispatch as fast as she could deliver, but according to the custom of the port. Pltf. alleged that by the custom of the port, embodied in a printed document headed "Statement of Custom & Practice," which was drawn up in 1899, receivers of wood cargoes were under an absolute obligation to provide clear quay space for unloading or a continuous supply of bogies, so that, on the arrival of the vessel in dock, she could be forthwith discharged at her full rate of discharge:—Held: whether the alleged custom did or did not exist was a question of fact; on the evidence pltf. had not established it; even assuming the custom had been proved, inasmuch as the effect of it would be to impose an obligation upon receivers for delay which they could not prevent, the question would have arisen whether the custom was reasonable.

If such a custom exists it must be notorious & certain, & its existence must be as capable of proof as other allegations of fact (EVE, J.).—THE LIZZIE, [1919] P. 22; 88 L. J. P. 83; 35 T. L. 4352. ——.]—Pltfs., the A., loaded with a cargo of Bombay wheat in bags arrived at Belfast on Dec. 28. Deft. was the indorsee of the bill of lading, which contained a provision that if the consignee did not take delivery of the goods as soon as the ship was ready to discharge, they should be landed & warehoused at the expense of the owner of the goods. The discharge of this cargo commenced on Dec. 29. For four days up to Tuesday night the cargo was discharged by whipping—a process by which one bag at a time is hoisted from the hold by the ship's tackles to a point above a weighing machine, placed at the height of a man's shoulder on an elevated staging on the deck near the hatch. It is then, when weighed, taken by the merchant's stevedore. Pltfs. having complained to their agent of the slowness of the discharge, & insisting that the cargo should be hurried out at top speed, pltfs.' agent informed deft.'s stevedore that he would discharge the rest of the cargo by hoisting—a process by which five bags at a time were raised from the hold of the vessel & placed on the deck, from which they were trucked to the weighing bridge, which, in the case of discharge by hoisting, is only a few inches above the deck. Deft. refused to take delivery by hoisting, or to accept delivery from the ship's rail of bags so hoisted, & the remainder of the cargo was discharged by pltfs.' men into a warehouse:—Held: the alleged custom as to the average rate of discharge having been abandoned by deft., the alleged custom of whipping, even if there was sufficient evidence to prove it, was unreasonable, & pltfs. were entitled to the damages in question.—GALLAHER v. CLYDESDALE SHIPOWNERS CO., LTD., [1908] 2 I. When the English cts. construe a charterparty as making lay days begin when the ship is ready to load, though not in berth, & foreign cts. treat the lay days as beginning when the vessel is in berth, the local law or action based upon it cannot be treated as a custom of the port:—Held: on the evidence, defts. had failed to establish the existence of a custom at the port of Novorossisk that lay days only begin to count from the time the vessel is moored alongside the quay.—ANGLO-HELLENIC S.S. In reality it was shipped for the purchaser of the stone, the real consignee. In an action for freight & demurrage, evidence of usage that in such cases the quarry owner never paid freight, etc., was admitted, & the question, whether the stone was shipped for deft., was left to the jury upon all the circumstances.

(2) There is no contract in writing & the usage is not as between consignor & consignee, but as between shipper & shipowner, I think, therefore, that the evidence is admissible (BLACKBURN, J.).

(3) The master of the ship has a lien for freight, but not for demurrage, so that as to the latter, he would be likely to enter into some express contract (BLACKBURN, J.).—DICKENSON v. LANO (1860), 2 F. & F. 188, N. P.

4366. Where inconsistent with general law—Usage for consignee to deduct from freight—Value of missing goods.]—A consignee of goods, or an indorsee of a bill of lading, has no right to have the value of missing goods deducted from the freight payable in respect of the goods delivered. This being the general law, it cannot be altered by a universal practice of merchants, which is not confined to any particular place or trade, to have the value of such goods deducted from the freight.

Semble: Bills of Lading Act, 1855 (c. 111), s. 3, by which a bill of lading in the hands of an indorsee for value is made conclusive evidence of the shipment of the goods therein mentioned, against the master signing the same, applies to a master & part owner who has signed it, in an action for freight brought by him on behalf of himself & the other owners of the vessel.—MEYER v. DRESSER (1864), 16 C. 4373. Custom of port—As to measurement of goods loaded.]—BOTTOMLEY v. FORBES, No. 4407, post.

4374. —— ——.]—By a charterparty made in London between pltf., a shipowner, & defts., Liverpool merchants, it was agreed that pltf.'s ship should sail to Bombay for a cargo of cotton or wool, & having loaded, should proceed to London or Liverpool as ordered, & deliver same on being paid freight as follows, viz.: "75*s.* per ton of 50 cubic feet delivered for cotton or wool." It is the practice at Bombay to compress the bales of cotton before shipment by machinery into the smallest possible space, & upon being unloaded at the port of discharge they expand considerably. Pltf. claimed to be entitled to have the freight calculated, under the above charterparty, according to the measurement of the bales after being unloaded, & brought his action to recover a balance of freight still due to him according to this mode of calculation. Evidence was given at the trial of the existence of a usage in the Bombay trade by which freight was payable under charterparties, in similar terms to that in question, upon the measurement of the bales before shipment; but no direct evidence was given to show that pltf. was aware of this usage:—Held: apart from the evidence of usage upon the true construction of the contract, the freight was payable on the measurement before shipment, & the evidence of usage was admissible as not contradicting the terms of the charterparty.—BUCKLE v. KNOOP (1867), L. The charter also granted to the corpn. all perquisites, ancient duties, & profits which they had theretofore lawfully had & enjoyed: provided that the sums thereby granted should be in lieu of all other duties theretofore received. In an action for dues in respect of merchandise whereof defts., being merchants & natives of Sunderland, were the owners, & which had been brought by vessels into the port of Sunderland, being a creek or member of the port of Newcastle:—Held: evidence of usage was admissible in explanation of the charter, & evidence of payment of the duty, under the same circumstances as those under which pltfs. in error were charged since 1584, was not inconsistent with the right construction of the charter, inasmuch as the first clause imposed the duty upon all persons, & the second clause only prescribed the manner in which some were to pay it.—BRADLEY v. NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE (PILOTS) (1853), 2 E. & B. 427; 23 L. 4379. —— As to delivery "alongside"—Provision to unload "according to custom of port."]—A charterparty provided that the cargo, which consisted of timber, should "be taken from alongside at merchants' risk & expense, according to the custom of the port." The vessel discharged at the port of Grimsby. By the custom of that port timber cargoes are taken from the ship's holds by means of the ship's winches & slings by stevedores employed & paid by the shipowner, & by them carried to the far side of the quay, about 60 feet from the side of the vessel, & there "lumped," or roughly piled. It was practically impossible to deposit the cargo on any other part of the quay:—Held: the shipowner was bound to carry the cargo across the quay & "lump" it at his own expense, & such delivery constituted delivery "alongside," within the meaning of the charterparty.—STEPHENS v. WINTRINGHAM (1898), 3 Com. The through rate was paid, & the goods were delivered to defts. The goods were damaged on the voyage from London to Cork:—Held: upon the true construction of the letter from defts. to pltfs. there was no contract by defts to carry the goods from London to Cork, & therefore evidence of the previous course of business between the parties was admissible to show what the contract was; & that course of business showed that defts. received the goods upon the terms that when once the goods were shipped their liability ceased.—PONTIFEX & WOOD, LTD. v. HARTLEY & CO. On her arrival at Yarmouth the vessel to lie "always afloat" could not come nearer than 13 feet out from the quay. In these circumstances the custom of the port was that a wooden staging should be erected between the ship about to discharge & the quay, & that stevedores employed by the shipbrokers on behalf of the shipowners should carry the cargo from the ship's rail over the staging & dump the same on the quay at not less than 10 feet from the quay edge, & that the whole cost of this work should be borne by the shipowners. This work was done & was paid for by the shipowners under protest. In an action by the shipowners against the charterers for the difference between the cost of the whole work & the rate for delivery at the ship's rail:—Held: the custom was inconsistent with the provision in the charterparty that the cargo should be taken from alongside the steamer at charterers' expense, & the shipowners were entitled to succeed.—PALGRAVE, BROWN & SON, LTD. v. S.S. B. "In Regular Turn."

4418. Loading—Primâ facie meaning.]—The words "in regular turn" in a charterparty primâ facie mean the regular turn of the port of loading.

But it may be shown, either from the construction of the charterparty itself, or by evidence, that the words were intended to have a different meaning.

The charterparty, dated Feb. 6, 1900, of a sailing ship, then at Hamburg, provided that she should proceed to the port of Newcastle, New South Wales, & there "in the usual & customary manner load in regular turn from Brown's Duckenfield Colliery, or any of the collieries the freighters may name," a cargo of coal, which the freighters bound themselves to ship. The coal was to be carried to South America. The charterers were themselves the owners of the Duckenfield Colliery. On Apr. 6, 1900, they sold to purchasers in South America the cargo of Duckenfield coal to be shipped by this ship. The ship arrived at Newcastle on Aug. 3, 1900, & was not berthed for loading until Oct. 6. Her loading was completed on Oct. 9.

By the regulations & custom of the port a loading berth could not be obtained until a loading order from the colliery was lodged.

On the arrival of the vessel a large number of other ships, which were entitled to priority over her, were waiting to load coals from the Duckenfield Colliery, & the charterers were unable to give her a loading order until Oct. 5, when it was lodged & application made to the berthing master for a berth. On the evidence the ct. held that the charterers had not chartered more vessels to load their coal than in the ordinary course of their business. The purchasers of the coal refused to accept any other kind of coal, though the charterers endeavoured to induce them to do so :—Held : upon the construction of the charterparty & with reference to the rules & custom of the port, the words "regular turn" must be taken to mean the regular turn of the colliery.—BARQUE QUILPUÉ, LTD. v. BROWN, [1904] 2 K. The ship arrived at Delagoa Bay & anchored within the commercial limits of the port on July 30, 1920, & notice of readiness to load was given on the following day. At Delagoa Bay there was only one loading berth, which was then occupied by another vessel, & the ship had to await her turn until Aug. 26. Pltf.'s vessel was ordered to, & duly arrived at, the Nob; but, though ready to deliver her cargo, she was kept waiting some days whilst another vessel, also consigned to defts., & already there, was being discharged by lighters sent by defts., after which the discharge of pltf.'s vessel was proceeded with. Pltf. claimed demurrage, at the agreed rate per day, on the ground that the time allowed for unloading began to count from the day the vessel was in her discharging berth at the Nob ready to deliver her cargo, & that the lay days had been exceeded. Defts. contended that they had complied with the terms of the charterparty by commencing the discharge of pltf.'s vessel "in regular turn" on the day after the completion of the discharge of the other vessel at the particular discharging berth to which pltf.'s vessel had been ordered:—Held: "in regular turn" at the Nob meant one vessel at a time.—THE CORDELIA, [1909] P. 27; 78 L. Pltf.'s vessel, though she arrived before several steam vessels, was delayed until they were first loaded; but she was loaded in the order of her arrival as regarded the other sailing vessels in harbour. Pltfs. claimed demurrage:—Held: the expression "regular turn" in the charterparty should, in the absence of exclusive words, be construed as "regular turn" according to the usage of the port of Whitehaven; it was not material that pltfs. were ignorant of such usage; & pltfs. could not recover.—KING v. HINDE (1883), 12 L. The charterparty provided (inter alia) that the steamer should be discharged according to the custom of the port, & that the cargo should be taken from alongside the steamer at charterers' expense as customary. The cargo arrived at Sunderland in due course, & pltfs. now sued to recover balance of freight. Defts. claimed to retain certain expenses which they had been put to in connection with the discharge of the cargo, & paid the remainder of the sum claimed into ct. At the point in Sunderland docks where the pit props were unloaded there were lines of railway parallel with, & close to, the edge of the quay; & as the dock authority would not allow those lines to be obstructed it was necessary that the pit props, after being discharged on to the quay, should be moved back away from the steamer to a piece of vacant land clear of the railway lines. Defts. contended that by a custom of the port the expense of moving the pit props back must be borne by pltf. shipowners, & also that the words in the charterparty which bound defts. to take the goods "from alongside as customary" had a customary meaning at Sunderland, & that "from alongside" meant "from some point on the quay clear of the railway lines":—Held: the evidence failed to establish either ground of defence, & the action therefore succeeded.—AKT. 4460. —— —— —— Adjustment of account—Hull.]—A cargo of wheat in bags was shipped on pltfs.' steamer from Australian ports to Hull by several consignors, in parcels, for several consignees, including both deft. cos. & on the arrival of the steamer at Hull some of the wheat had escaped from the bags & could not be identified as having come from any particular parcel. Pltfs., in the course of discharge, caused any slack bags to be filled with the loose grain & delivered to each of the consignees in proper number of bags provisionally & subject to account, & at the close of the discharge ascertained the proportion which the total weight of the bags discharged bore to the total bill of lading weights, & in the case of any consignee who had received less than his proper proportion, made up the deficiency as far as possible out of the loose grain. In case of dispute the shipowner made out a pro rata statement, showing all the proportions to be delivered. Although each of deft. companies had received its proper number of bags first deft. co. alleged the delivery to them to be 5 tons short, & the delivery to second deft. co. to be the same amount in excess, of their proper respective quantities. In an action by pltfs. against first deft. co. for freight & in the alternative against second deft. co. for the return of wheat delivered to the second instead of to first deft. co., first deft. co. counterclaimed against their co-defts. for wheat delivered to, & wrongly retained by, the latter. The judge found, upon the evidence, that pltfs. in making delivery as above described had acted in accordance with a custom of the Port of Hull, & that by this custom any consignee who had provisionally received more than his proper share had received the excess to the use of those consignees who were still in deficiency & was under an obligation to deliver it to such consignees on demand. He also found that the pro rata statement was binding on all consignees. He accordingly gave judgment for pltfs. against first deft. co. & for first deft. co. on their counterclaim against their co-defts.:—Held: the judge's decision must be affirmed, on the grounds that there was evidence to support the judge's finding as to the custom & that it was neither unreasonable nor uncertain & was therefore valid in law & that any consignee having knowledge of the custom was under an implied contract to redeliver to any other such an amount as the proportional distribution required, & on the ground that, whether there was sufficient evidence of a clear & uniform custom or not, second deft. co. had full cognisance of the method of dealing with wheat at the Port of Hull, & as they allowed loose grain which was the joint property of all the consignees to be placed in their bags, the law would raise an implied promise on their part that they would redeliver to consignees whose weight was short such a quantity as was shown by the pro rata statement to be the proper quantity to be delivered.—PENINSULAR & ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD. v. LEETHAM (H.) & SONS, LTD. & KEIGHLEY, MAXSTED & CO. of bills of lading which incorporated the terms of the charterparty. On arrival pltfs. discharged part of the cargo on to the quay & stacked it there & discharged part of it into lighters & stowed it in the lighters, & they brought this action, alleging that as defts. did not take the cargo from alongside the steamer they, pltfs., had had to incur the expense of stacking on the quay & of stowage in the lighters. Defts. pleaded that by the custom of the Port of London the shipowners were bound to bear the cost of unloading & stacking timber on the quay alongside the ship, &, in the case of overside discharge, the cost of delivery & stowage in the lighters :—Held : by the custom in question the shipowners were under an obligation to bear all costs of unloading & stacking on the quay & of delivery & stowage in the lighters, & as there was no inconsistency between the custom & the charterparty the action failed.—SMITH, HOGG & CO., LTD. v. BAMBERGER (LOUIS) & SONS (1928), 44 T. The shipowner is bound to do the whole work of delivering the goods into the craft & of stowing the goods therein in the reasonable & ordinary manner, so that the goods may not be damaged or imperilled, & so that the craft may be loaded to the usual & reasonable extent & may be properly & safely navigable.—GLASGOW NAVIGATION CO., LTD. v. HOWARD (W. 4475. —— —— West Hartlepool & Sunderland.]—Pltfs. claimed from defts. the cost of discharging cargoes of sawn goods & pit props, of which defts. were consignees, at West Hartlepool & Sunderland. The goods were carried under the terms of the "Scanfin" charterparty, 1899, by which it is provided that the cargo shall be "loaded & discharged with customary dispatch . . . according to the custom of the respective ports. . . . Cargo to be brought to & taken from alongside at the charterer's risk & expense as customary." In some cases an additional clause was added, by which the shipowner was required to employ the charterer's stevedores & pay the usual fee & cost only.

At the ports of West Hartlepool & Sunderland timber is discharged either by the ships' tackle or by means of shore cranes owned by the dock co. In either case, the cargo is swung out from the ship in a sling, which is met & released on shore by stevedores' gangs. In some cases the sling containing the cargo is lowered into railway trucks standing on the railway along the quay, in other cases it is carried back by the stevedores' gangs to merchants' allotted cargo spaces in rear of the discharging berth. In either event the cargo, after release from the crane tackle, requires to be stowed in the wagon or stacked upon the quay. Rates are charged by the stevedores inclusive of the whole of these operations at a fixed sum per standard, & stevedores' accounts made up on this basis are commonly submitted to & paid by the shipowners or their agents.

Defts. contended that they were not liable, under the terms of the charterparty, to pay any part of the stevedores' charges, since, by the custom of the ports, "alongside" meant on the quay, & if part of the stacking space was in this sense "alongside," then the whole space must also be alongside ; alternatively, they contended that there was a custom for the shipowners to pay the fixed sum charge per standard, inclusive of the whole operation of discharge & stacking cargo :—Held : (1) the words "cargo to be discharged according to the custom of the respective ports" related only to the use of dispatch in the process of discharge, &, any custom not consistent with the express terms of the charterparty, such as the custom alleged, being excluded, defts. were bound to pay such proportion of the cost of discharge as represented the operations performed after the cargo had been put at the disposal of the receiver by loosing of the sling ; (2) the additional clause requiring the ship to employ charterer's stevedores & pay the usual fee & cost only did not affect the rights of the parties under the charterparty ; (3) a custom for the shipowners to pay a fixed sum per standard inclusive of all the operations of discharge had not been made out.—THE RENSFJELL, THE ORNESFJELL, THE UPPLAND, THE FRITIOFF, THE SVEIN JARL (1924), 131 L. A clause in the charterparty provided that "The cargo to be loaded & discharged with customary steamship dispatch as fast as the steamer can receive & deliver during the ordinary working hours of the respective ports, but according to the custom of the respective ports . . . the cargo to be brought to & taken from alongside the steamer at the charterers' risk & expense as customary." The steamer discharged her cargo of timber at Hull, but defts. did not take any of the cargo from alongside the steamer, & pltfs., the shipowners, were obliged to remove the cargo from alongside the steamer & place it on bogies. They brought an action to recover from defts. the cost of doing so. Defts. relied on the above clause, & refused to pay on the ground that, by the custom of the port of Hull, the expense in question was borne by the shipowners. The shipowners contended that in spite of the custom the expenses in question were thrown on the charterers by the words of the charterparty:—Held: the custom of the port was inconsistent with the express terms of the charterparty, & therefore the expense of removing the cargo from alongside the steamer & placing it on bogies should be borne by the charterers.—REDERI AKT. In an action by pltfs. against the holders of a bill of lading for the cargo, which incorporated the conditions of the charterparty, for demurrage of the ship through default of defts. in not discharging at least thirty "mille" per working day, defts. in their statement of defence pleaded with regard to a certain number of days in respect of which demurrage was claimed, in substance, as follows: that pltfs. or their agents knew, or ought to have known, the customs of the port of Iquique when they signed the charterparty ; that the customary mode of discharge at Iquique is that ships lie in the bay, & are discharged by means of lighters, which carry the cargo from the ship to the beach ; that the same number of days as before mentioned, out of the period between the commencement of the lay days at Iquique & the completion of the discharge of the ship, were "surf days," i.e., days on which the surf on the beach at Iquique is so heavy that "the operation of unloading vessels in the bay is not only dangerous to life & property, but is in fact commercially impracticable" ; that "by the established custom of the port of Iquique 'surf days' are not working days, & persons who have engaged to take delivery of cargo from vessels in the bay are not bound to do so on 'surf days,' i.e., days which appear as 'surf days' in the register book kept by the captain of the port at his office" ; & that, by the custom of the port of Iquique & of the trade of importing lumber to that port, such days are not within the meaning of the term "working days" as used in such a charterparty as that in question:—Held: on the assumption that the allegations of fact in the defence were true, the alleged custom was a valid custom, & the words "working day" in the charterparty must be interpreted in accordance with it, & defts. were therefore entitled to judgment.—BRITISH & MEXICAN SHIPPING CO., LTD. v. LOCKETT BROTHERS & CO., LTD., [1911] 1 K. # Part VIII.—Freight.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

4508. Freight defined.]—(1) Freight is the reward which the law gives for carrying goods; it arises on a contract for the conveyance of merchandise; it is said to be in its nature an entire contract; so that, as a general rule, subject to some exceptions & to special agreement until the contract is completed by the delivery of the goods at the place of destination, nothing can be demanded for freight. When a ship at sea is sold, the seller is subject to an obligation as well as entitled to a profit in respect of freight accruing due, & the duty & profit may be well held to pass together with the ship, by means of which the duty is to be performed, & the profit to be acquired; nevertheless, the title to the freight & th title to the ship are, as I just said, often separate; & the argument founded on the analogy to the case of freight, does not rest on a sure foundation (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.).

(2) The cargo of a whale ship is an acquisition from time to time made by the employment of the ship & of the crew: but there is nothing in the nature of a contract for the conveyance of merchandise (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.).—LANGTON v. HORTON (1842), 5 Beav. 9; 11 L. J. Ch. 233; 6 Jur. 357; 49 E. R. 479.

4511. ——.]—Shipowner & charterer may agree, by the terms of a charterparty, that a portion of the stipulated freight shall be prepaid; & that such prepayment will not affect its legal character of freight; the remainder may be the subject of insurance by the shipowner. A ship was chartered to sail from Greenock to Bombay, to carry a cargo of coals. Freight was to be paid on unloading & right delivery of the cargo at & after the rate of 42*s.* per ton of 20 cwts. on the quantity delivered. It was provided that "such freight is to be paid, say one half in cash on signing bills of lading less four months' interest at bank rate, but not less than 5 per cent. per annum, 5 per cent. for insurance, & 2½ per cent. on gross amount of freight in lieu of consignment at Bombay, & the remainder on right delivery of the cargo, less cost of coals short delivered, in cash, at current rates of exchange for bills on London at six months' sight." Half of the estimated amount of the freight was paid in London. The shipowner effected two insurances, one for £500 "on freight valued at £2,000," the other for £700 on "freight payable abroad valued at £2,000." The ship was lost before entering Bombay harbour, but one half of the cargo was saved & delivered. The master, in the belief that the prepayment had satisfied the freight on this half so delivered, made no demand on the charterer. The shipowner claimed on his policies as for a total loss of the other half of the freight:—Held: (1) on the proper construction of the policy the whole sum agreed upon constituted freight; half of the whole sum of that freight had been paid in England; it was not a prepayment of half the rate of freight calculated as distributed over the whole cargo, but of half the whole gross freight; half of the whole remained to be paid abroad on right delivery of the cargo; that half had been lost through perils of the sea, & the shipowner was entitled on his policies on freight to recover as for the total loss of that half.

(2) Freight is the reward payable to the carrier for the safe carriage & delivery of goods; it is payable only on the safe carriage & delivery; if the goods are lost on the voyage, nothing is payable; & in cases where the freight is made payable at so much per ton of the goods, & part of the goods only are delivered, a proportionate part of the freight only is payable (BLACKBURN, L.J.).—ALLISON v. BRISTOL MARINE INSURANCE CO. 4512. —— Lump sum freight.]—A charterparty from Riga to London provided that the ship should load a full & complete cargo of lathwood, & deliver the same on being paid freight as follows; a lump sum of £315. There was the usual exception of sea risks, & the freight was to be paid half on arrival, & the remainder on unloading & right delivery of cargo. Part of the cargo, loaded in accordance with the charterparty, was lost by perils of the sea, without any default of the master or crew:—Held: the shipowner was, on delivery of the remainder of the cargo, entitled to the full sum.

The freight . . . is a stipulated gross sum to be paid for the use of the whole ship for the whole voyage. The rule is that in such a case the whole of the gross sum is payable, even although the freighter did not fully load the ship. In other

On arrival at Q. the cargo was found 68 bushels short. Pltf. allowed the value of that quantity to the consignee out of the river freight:—Held:

4517. Guarantee of sum as gross freight—Loss of ship & cargo—Estimated freight on cargo less than sum guaranteed—Amount of freight recoverable.]—A. chartered a vessel from I. to L. with a full cargo of petroleum. A., being unable to supply the cargo, the owners of the vessel agreed to cancel the charterparty, & seek for another cargo, on A. guaranteeing the vessel a "sum of £900 gross freight home." The owners procured a cargo whose estimated freight would have amounted to £556 14*s*., but the vessel was lost on its way home:—Held: the owners were at any rate entitled to recover from A. the difference between the estimated & guaranteed freights, if not the whole freight of £900.—CARR v. WALLACHIAN PETROLEUM CO., LTD. 4518. What amounts to freight—Sum payable on loading—Irrespective of ship's arrival.]—The term freight in common parlance is ambiguous, & may be so applied as to mean a sum of money to be paid at all events upon the taking of goods on board to be carried on a voyage, in lieu of the expectation of earning freight upon the contingency of the ship's arrival.—ANDREW v. MOORHOUSE (1814), 5 Taunt. 435; 1 Marsh. 122; 128 E. 4521. Freight as incidental to ownership—Freight to be earned under charterparty.]—Freight to be earned under a charterparty is not an incident to the ownership of the vessel; & therefore although an underwriter of a policy of insurance upon the vessel herself becomes, by abandonment to him upon a constructive total loss happening through the fault of another vessel, entitled after payment of the sum secured by the policy to every benefit accruing from the ownership of the insured vessel, he cannot claim any part of the damages recovered from the owners of the wrongdoing vessel on account of loss of freight intended to be earned by the insured vessel. Defts. being owners of a ship chartered her upon a voyage, & insured her with pltfs., & they insured the freight intended to be earned with other underwriters. Defts.' ship became a constructive total loss through a collision with the C. occasioned by negligence in navigating the latter vessel. Pltfs. settled with defts. for a total loss of the insured ship. No freight was earned under the charterparty. Afterwards defts. recovered from the owners of the C. damages for the loss of their ship & of her freight:—Held: pltfs. were not entitled to any part of the damages recovered from the owners of the C. on account of the loss of the freight intended to be earned by defts.' ship.—SEA INSURANCE CO. v. HADDEN (1884), 13 Q. ## SECT. 2.—AUTHORITY OF MASTER TO BIND OWNERS.

4524. General rule.]—The master of a ship has no general authority from the owner to sign bills of lading for goods not received on board; & all persons taking a bill of lading by indorsement or otherwise have notice that his authority is limited to signing bills of lading for goods received on board.

The authority of the master of a ship is very large & extends to all acts that are usual & necessary for the use & enjoyment of the ship; but is subject to several well-known limitations. He may make contracts for the hire of the ship, but cannot vary that which the owner has made. . . . He may make contracts to carry goods on freight

4528. —— —— As to goods actually on board.]—M & co. of Porto Rico, chartered a ship of pltf. for a voyage from Glasgow to Porto Rico, & back, guaranteeing a full cargo home, freight to be at the rate of £4 10*s.* on the homeward cargo. The captain discharged his outward cargo, & was then ordered to proceed to another port in Porto Rico for the homeward cargo & address himself there to L. & co. After L. & co. had loaded 498 hogsheads of sugar M. & co. failed, & they refused to load any more & demanded back what was already on board. The captain thereupon entered under protest into a fresh charterparty with L. & co., by which freight at the rate of 30*s.* per ton was to be paid on the whole cargo & L. & co. then loaded 180 more hogsheads. In a special case stated by consent:—Held: L. & co., as agents for the charterers, had no right to take back the 498 hogsheads actually put on board under the first charterparty & the captain had no authority to vary the contract as to goods actually on board; but as the charterers had refused to ship any more goods, the captain had authority to enter into the second charterparty & the shipowner therefore had a lien on the 498 hogsheads for freight at the rate of £4 10*s.*, but on the rest of the cargo only at the rate of 30*s.* per ton.—PEARSON v. GÖSCHEN (1864), 17 C. Deft. was a merchant & ship agent at Quebec & had transactions in the way of trade with H. & co. The ship proceeded to Quebec, with instructions from H. & co. to the master to apply to deft. to charter it from thence to England. At that time H. & co. were indebted to deft. Deft. effected a charterparty in which he made the freight payable to himself at Quebec, & having received the money, retained it in liquidation of the debt due to him from H. & co. The voyage having been performed & the freight earned:—Held: pltfs., as owners of the ship to which the freight was incident, were entitled to recover the amount from deft. either under a special count for wrongfully making it payable to himself, or as money had & received by him to pltf.'s use.

If the master be prevented by the default of the consignees or restraints of princes from delivering the whole cargo there, he shall be entitled to freight pro rata for the part delivered. If a ship be freighted on a single voyage outwards, & be prevented from delivering her cargo: Semble: she shall be entitled to receive from the owner of the cargo, freight for bringing it back. 4544. —— —— —— ——.]—The usual clause in a bill of lading engaging the master of the ship to deliver the goods to the consignee or his assigns, he or they paying freight for the goods, is introduced for the benefit of the master only, & not for the benefit of the consignor; & therefore the master is not bound to the consignor to withhold the delivery of the goods unless the consignee or his assigns pay the freight. Nor does it vary the case that the consignor was also the charterer of the ship.

Where the master covenanted in a charterparty to proceed with certain goods from London to Tangiers: there to apply "to the correspondents' factors, or agents of the charterer for orders, whether he was to proceed to St. Lucar or Cadiz; & that pursuant to the orders he would make a right & true delivery to the correspondents' factors, or agents of the charterer agreeably to bills of lading; & the charterer covenanted that he would pay to the master immediately on a right & true delivery of the cargo in full for the freight of the ship at a certain rate in sterling money: & afterwards bills of lading were signed & delivered, making the cargo deliverable at Tangiers & St. Lucar to J. P., the charterer's agent at Tangiers, or his assigns, he or they paying freight for the goods, so much in sterling money, at the current exchange at Cadiz on London; & the master was ordered by J. B. P. the agent of deft. in that behalf, according to the charterparty: the master, who had not received the freight from B. P. on delivery of the cargo to him; was held entitled to recover it from the charterer, in an action of covenant upon the charterparty. For neither the fixing of the rate of exchange in the bills of lading varies this from the common rule above mentioned; nor the omission in the bill of lading of going to Cadiz, which was named in the charterparty together with Tangiers & St. Lucar; for such omission only relieved the master, who was to deliver agreeably to the bills of lading, from going to Cadiz, but did not take from him the power of going there under the charterparty. Again, B. P., who was only averred to be the agent of the charterer, is either to be considered as virtually the assign of J. P., to whom or to whose assigns the bill of lading required the delivery to be made; or J. P. must be taken, in default of making any appointment, as having refused to accept the cargo; & then the master properly delivered it to the agent of the charterer & consignor himself, so as to found the action of covenant on the charterparty.—SHEPARD v. DE BERNALES (1811), 13 East, 565; 104 E. By the terms of the charterparty, freight was to be paid in London on signing bills of lading, the owner to have an absolute lien for freight. On the same day L. rechartered the ship to defts. to carry the same quantity of iron at an increased freight, with similar provisions as to the payment of & lien for freight, & with the following clause—"The brokerage of 5 per cent. is due on the execution of this charter to L., by whom the vessel is to be entered & cleared at the port of loading." L. had, however, no authority to act as broker for pltf., or to receive the freight. Neither pltf. nor defts. knew of the charterparty entered into by the other. The iron was shipped by defts., & the master signed & defts. received bills of lading, by which the iron, stated to be shipped by defts. was to be delivered to consignees or assigns, "paying freight for the goods as per charterparty." Pltf. did not claim the freight on signing the bills of lading, & delivered the cargo without insisting upon his lien. L. in the meantime obtained the freight due from defts., & having stopped payment, the freight due under his charter was not paid to pltf.:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to recover freight from defts. as shippers of the iron, inasmuch as both parties made a mistake as to the charterparty referred to in the bills of lading, & were consequently never ad idem. T. sent on the bills of lading to deft. without the freight note, but making out another freight note. Deft. afterwards paid T. the freight. The goods having been received on board, the bills of lading were forwarded to G. B. & co., & stated, that they had been shipped to "Messrs. G. B. & co., or to their assigns, he or they paying freight for the said goods, as per charterparty." G. B. & co. sold the wool in question to deft., under a written agreement whereby the latter stipulated to perform & fulfil all charterparties & agreements for freight for the wool theretofore made or to be made by the sellers; that the sellers should hand the bills of lading over to the buyer, properly assigned, & that the wool should vest absolutely in the buyer from the day of the agreement. The bills of lading were indorsed & delivered by G. B. & co. to deft. Deft. paid G. Deft. traversed the promise & the default, & pleaded that pltf. was not ready to deliver. It was proved that, by charterparty, pltf., owner of a ship, agreed with the freighter to deliver a cargo at the port of discharge on payment of freight, conformably to the bills of lading; & a certain number of lay days were allowed, after which demurrage was be charged at a given rate per day: the bills of lading stipulated for delivery to the freighter, or his assigns, on paying freight as per charterparty. Deft. became assignee of the bill of lading, gave notice thereof to pltf., & demanded the goods, sending his lighters to receive them. Pltf. delivered a portion, & demanded payment for freight on so much: deft. refusing to pay, pltf. refused to deliver the residue, & the running days expired. Some time after, pltf. delivered the residue, & was paid the remaining freight:—Held: neither the contract nor the breach was proved.

At the trial it appeared that pltfs. had received on board their vessel a quantity of coals from the Burnt Island co., to be carried to London; that the captain signed a bill of lading, by which the coals were made deliverable "unto N., deft., for the London Gas co., or to his assigns, he or they paying freight for the said goods 10*s.* per ton in cash of true delivery." On the arrival of the vessel in London, deft. produced the bill of lading & received the goods under it, & afterwards offered to pay the freight by a bill at two months:—Held: deft. was not personally liable, inasmuch as on the face of the bill of lading he was a mere agent to receive the goods for the co., the property vesting in them.

4600. —— Ship rechartered—Freight due on bill of lading less than freight due on charterparty—Effect of cesser clause.]—By a charterparty for the carriage of a full & complete cargo of oats from New Zealand to London, a lump sum was to be paid for freight on delivery of the cargo, & liberty was given to the charterers to recharter the ship, the captain to sign bills of lading for the cargo according to the custom of the port at the current or any rate of freight required, without prejudice to the charterparty. The charterparty provided in the usual form: "The liabilities of the charterers to cease on the vessel being loaded the master & owners having a lien on the cargo for all freight & demurrage under this charterparty." The charterers rechartered the ship, & the captain signed a bill of lading for the cargo, by which freight was to be paid at a certain rate per ton on the weight of cargo delivered. Owing to loss of weight of the cargo during the voyage, the freight payable under the bill of lading on the cargo actually delivered was less than the agreed freight under the charterparty. In an action by the shipowner against the charterers to recover the balance:—Held: the cesser clause discharged the charterers from liability under the charterparty only to the extent to which the lien obtained by the shipowner was an equivalent, & as the bill of lading freight for which the shipowner obtained a lien on the cargo was less than the charterparty freight, the charterers were liable.—HANSEN v. HARROLD BROTHERS, [1894] 1 Q. Freight to be paid in London on signing bills of lading, the owner or master to have an absolute lien for freight. On the following day L. chartered the ship to deft. at 8*s.* per ton for the same amount of iron. The charter contained similar clauses as to freight & lien, & the following clause at the end: "The brokerage of 5 per cent. is due on the execution of this charter to R., by whom the vessel is to be entered & cleared at the port of loading." Though deft. thought he was treating with L., as broker for the ship, L. had no authority in fact to act as broker for pltf., or to receive the freight; & neither pltf. nor deft. knew of the charter entered into by the other. The cargo having been put on board by deft., the master signed bills of lading making it deliverable to consignees or assigns, "they paying freight for said goods as per charterparty." Pltf. did not demand the freight on signing the bills of lading. The cargo was duly

4628. —— Out of bills of lading freight received by charterers—Where ship lost.]—Defts. chartered a ship from pltf. By a clause in the charterparty it was provided that freight should be paid, "about one half" . . . on sailing . . . balance . . . on right delivery"; that the master should sign bills of lading "in the usual manner at any rate of freight"; & that charterers' liability should cease "on shipment of cargo & payment of advance." Defts. & others shipped goods on the vessel, defts. receiving freight from the other shippers of goods, & the captain received half the charter freight. Eleven out of the twelve bills of lading signed by the captain described the freight as "paid . . . in London . . . ship lost or not lost." The ship was lost:—Held: pltf. could not recover the balance of the charter freight from defts. out of the bills of lading freights received by defts.—JANENTZKY v. LANGRIDGE & Co. (1895), 11 T. 4629. —— Charterparty not amounting to demise.]—(1) The question whether shipowners are, when the bill of lading freight is paid to the masters, entitled as against the charterers to collect & receive it, is one of fact, depending upon the documents & circumstances in each case. The apparent conflict in the authorities seems to arise mainly from the fact that the documents & circumstances are different in different cases. There are certain more or less typical cases. For instance, there is the case, very often referred to, but in practice rather uncommon, where the charterparty amounts to what is called a demise of the vessel. In such a case it is reasonably clear that the contract with the shippers under the bill of lading is between them & the charterers, & not between them & the ownrs. Again, there is another class of cases in which the charterers by the charterparty do no more than undertake that a full cargo shall be shipped, & guarantee payment of a certain freight. In such cases it is very often stipulated that upon shipment of a full cargo, & upon the charterers paying or securing payment in the manner agreed upon of the excess, if any, of chartered freight over & above the bill of lading freight, the charterers' liability under the charterparty is to cease. In such cases the contract of carriage under the bill of lading would ordinarily be between the owners & shippers.

But even in cases of this kind it is scarcely safe to lay down a hard & fast rule. The circumstances & terms of the documents may differ in different cases belonging to this class, & between the two types or classes there is a great variety of intermediate cases.

On Nov. 2, 1900, defts. chartered their steamship for a term of twenty-four calendar months at the rate of £1,550, less 2½ per cent. commission, a month payable in advance. The vessel came on hire on Mar. 18, 1901, & was employed by the charterer to carry a cargo from the United States to Japan. The charterparty provided that the owners should have a lien upon all cargoes & all sub-freights for any amounts due under the charterparty. The cargo was carried under a contract made between the shippers & the charterer. Under the bill of lading there was a lien as against the shippers for the bill of lading freight payable at Nagasaki, in Japan, & by the charterparty, the owners had a lien upon cargoes & sub-freights for amounts due under the charterparty. On arrival of the vessel at Colombo, in the course of the voyage, the master was obliged to pay for bunker coal to enable her to proceed to Japan, by drawing upon the owners a bill for £134 17*s.* 2*d.*, which was duly honoured. By Clause 2 of the charterparty all coals were to be supplied by the charterer. During the discharge the owners paid disbursements amounting to £250 which, under Clause 2 of the charterparty, should have been paid by the charterer. The vessel arrived at Nagasaki on June 9, 1901, & completed her discharge there on June 26.

On her arrival at Nagasaki there was due in respect of bill of lading freight £5,258 7*s.* 11*d.*, which the master, acting upon the owner's instructions, collected, & which was held by them. Of that amount it was admitted they were entitled to retain £3,523, made up of £3,100 for chartered freight due & unpaid upon the vessel's arrival, £390 for chartered hire due for the eight days June 18–26, & £33 for bunker coals taken over by the charterer at the beginning of the voyage.

On June 18, 1901, a further month's hire, amounting to £1,511 5*s.* became due. On June 26 the owners withdrew the vessel from the chartered service of the charterer, without prejudice to their claim against him for breach of the charterparty. It was agreed, for the purpose of an arbn. in respect of disputes as to freights arising out of the charterparty that the owners were entitled to £3,000 damages in respect of such breach. Upon a special case stated by the arbitrator:—Held: (2) the two sums of £134 17*s.* 2*d.* & £250 were amounts due under the charterparty, & the owners had a lien upon the £5,258 7*s.* 11*d.* for these two sums, making up £384 17*s.* 2*d.*; (3) if the bill of lading freight was actually received before June 18, there was no lien for that amount at the time the lien was exercised, & therefore no lien for the £1,511 5*s.*, but if the bill of lading freight was received after June 18 & before June 26, when the vessel was withdrawn by the shipowners, at the date it was received the lien existed; (4) there was no lien for the £3,000 damages; (5) if the shipowners were entitled under the charterparty to collect & receive the £5,258 7*s.* 11*d.*, then under the charterparty they had to account for it with the charterer, or claimants, as representing him, but as against claimants the shipowners would be entitled to set up any cross-claims they might have under the charterparty against the charterer.—SAMUEL, SAMUEL & CO. v. WEST HARTLEPOOL STEAM NAVIGATION CO. L. who had no notice of the original charterparty, shipped a cargo in pursuance of the second charterparty, & bills of lading were signed by the master as presented by which the cargo was to be delivered to the order or assigns of the shippers on payment of freight without recourse to shippers as per the second charterparty:—Held: the bills of lading were signed by the master as agent of the shipowners & the shipowners were entitled to sue the indorsees of the bills of lading for the freight due thereon.—WASTWATER S.S. Thereupon the agent must account to the shipowner for the freight received without deduction of any disbursements already laid out by him on the charterer's behalf. Qu.: whether the agent in such a case is bound to account for freight actually received by him before receipt of such a notice from the shipowner.—MOLTHES REDERI AKT. v. ELLERMAN'S WILSON LINE, LTD., [1927] 1 K. sum of £100 sterling. Messrs. G. loaded the vessel with 1,350 sacks of flour, & consigned the same to one L. B. in England. One P. put on board 500 sacks, for which pltf. gave a bill of lading, in which it was stated that pltf. would deliver them in the name of P. to defts., "paying him freight according to contract with Messrs. G." These 500 sacks of flour were shipped on the joint account of P. & defts., & the latter, whilst the flour was in the course of transit, became the sole owners thereof by purchase from P. of his interest therein. P. sent the bill of lading to defts., inclosed in a letter, in which he stated that the bill of lading did not express the freight, but that he had given a letter of order in favour of Messrs. G., that, on good delivery, defts. would pay Messrs. G. the freight upon the 500 sacks, at etc. The amount of freight mentioned in this latter exceeded that specified in the charterparty. In this latter of order, there was a request to defts. to deliver the amount of the freight to L. B. On the delivery of the cargo, L. B. paid the whole amount of the freight to pltf. & afterwards applied to defts. for payment of the freight of the 500 sacks; but he refused to pay the full amount of the freight claimed, on the ground that the flour had been damaged in the carriage. In an action by the master of the vessel against defts. for the freight of the 500 sacks of flour:—Held: there was no evidence of any contract between defts. & the master of the vessel with respect to this portion of the cargo; but, defts., if liable, were liable only to Messrs. G., upon a sub-contract with them. —ZWILCHENBART v. HENDERSON (1854), 9 Exch. 722; 23 L. J. Ex. 234; 18 J. P. 616; 156 E. R. 309.

4634. —— Charterparty amounting to demise.]—A charterparty of a ship as a general ship stipulated that the affreighters would pay for the hire of the ship a lump sum in full, to be ascertained before the sailing of the ship, payment to be made by the captain receiving such freight, not exceeding half, as the charterers might have payable abroad as per bills of lading as by the charterers' order payable at the port of discharge, & the balance to be paid by the acceptance of the charterers, at three months, payable in London, or in bills or cash, at charterer's option. It also stipulated that the charterers should have the option of naming the lumpers & stevedores, but they were to be under the direction of the master, & the owners of the ship were to be responsible for improper stowage, that only such goods should be received on board as the charterers might direct, that the master should, at the charterers' request, sign bills of lading in the usual manner at any freight the charterers might choose without prejudice to the charter; that the charterers should have the option of putting a full cargo in the fore cabin, & if used for passengers, the space to be allowed off the chartered freight, & that the ship should be kept by the owners during the voyage tight & staunch, & well provided with men, etc. The charterers elected to pay a lump sum, part to be paid abroad out of the freights reserved by the bill of lading, & the balance in England, as agreed in the charterparty. The bills of lading signed by the captain stipulated that freight was to be paid here one month after sailing, with average accustomed:—Held: under the terms of the charterparty, the contracts made by the signing of the bills of lading were to be considered as made by the captain as agent for the charterers & not for the shipowner, & the charterers & not the shipowner were entitled to claim the freight payable under the bills of lading.—MARQUAND v. BANNER (1856), 6 E. & B. 232; 25 L. The present pltfs., who were not parties to the collision action, now claimed to recover from deft. the difference between the charterparty freight & the bill of lading freight, which the Ruggiero de Flores was in course of earning at the time the collision took place. By the charterparty & sub-charterparty, which were practically in identical terms, the captain was to be under the orders of the charterers, or sub-charterers, as regards employment, agency, & other arrangements, but the charterers, or sub-charterers, were to indemnify the owners from all consequences or liabilities that might arise from the captain signing bills of lading. The cargo was shipped by pltfs., & the mate's receipts were handed to pltfs. who signed the bills of lading & gave the captain orders to deliver the cargo at a particular port, where, if the collision had not occurred, it would have been taken delivery of by pltfs.' agents:—Held: pltfs. had sufficient interest in & possession of the cargo to enable them to bring the action.—THE OKEHAMPTON, [1913] P. 173; 83 L. p. Right of mortgagee to freight—Freight received by agents.]—Before the mtgee. of a ship obtained possession, & after her arrival in port, the owner's agent, who was also agent for the charterers & consignees, arranged with them that the freight should be discharged by a sale to him of part of the cargo, instead of payment being made as the charterparty provided. Upon this arrangement the cargo was landed, & stored with wharfingers:—Held: the mtgee.'s lien for freight was ended.—BELFAST HARBOUR COMRS. v. LAWTHER & MARINE INVESTMENT SOCIETY, THE EDWARD CARDWELL (1865), 12 L. relating to its employment, or non-employment, or to any rate of freight to be earned by its employment, until the mtgee. takes possession. The mtgee. on taking possession becomes the owner, & it is by virtue of that ownership, & not by virtue of any antecedent contract or right, that he is entitled to receive the freight, which, by contract or otherwise, is lawfully payable.

(2) Goods which, by the terms of the bill of lading have been carried upon a nominal amount of freight, can be lawfully demanded, by the holder of the bill of lading, on payment of that amount.

(3) The owner of the ship cannot, by his subsequent acts, give to his mtgees., as against the holder of a bill of lading, rights different from those possessed by himself under it. M. was the owner of sixty shares in a ship. B., who acted as master, was the owner of the remaining four shares. As B. could not get at San Francisco, where he was, any employment for the ship, he determined to obtain a cargo of wheat & bring it to England "on ship's account." Not having money to purchase the wheat, he obtained the cargo on the credit of P. & co. To them he gave bills of lading, describing the wheat as "shipped on owner's account," deliverable to the order of P. & co. "at freight of 1*s.* per ton." Bills of exchange for the price of the wheat, afterwards duly accepted by M., were also given to P. & co. M., who carried on business in London, had obtained from K. & co., merchants in London, advances of money, &, by way of security, had given them a mtge. of his shares in the ship. While the ship was on its voyage M. arranged with B. & co., also of London, to make him advances to take up the bills of exchange; the advances were made, & for these advances he agreed that B. & co. should receive the bills of lading, & certain policies of insurance effected by him, & should sell the cargo for his account & their own. B. & co. sold the cargo of wheat to third persons. The sale-note described the wheat as "at the price of 43*s.* 6*d.* per quarter of 500 lbs., shipped . . . including freight & insurance, etc. . . . Vessel to discharge afloat. Payment, cash in London, within seven days," etc. The last sentence of the note was, "As cargo is coming on ship's account, freight is to be computed at 55*s.* per ton of 2,240 lbs., & invoice to be rendered accordingly." The invoice, made out by M., contained these words "6,179 qrs. @ 43*s.* 6*d.* per 500 lbs." "Freight on tons 1,379-7-1-3 @ 55*s.* per 2,240 lbs." M. obtained from B. & co. necessary advances, with which he took up the bills of exchange, which, with the bills of lading attached, were then handed to him. Both sets of bills were delivered to B. & co. with a memorandum indorsed on the bills of lading that they were "assigned to B. & co.," & "the freight assigned is at the rate of 55*s.* per ton, & not the nominal amount of 1*s.* per ton." The bills of lading & invoice were sent to the purchasers of the wheat. When the vessel arrived K. & co., as mtgees. of the ship, took possession of it. The purchasers of the wheat claimed delivery of it to them on payment of the freight stated in the bills of lading:—Held: they were entitled to the delivery of it on payment of that freight, for the bills of lading could not, under the circumstances of the case, be altered, & the 55*s.* per ton introduced into the bought-note, formed part of the whole purchase-money, being a payment to be made on delivery of the cargo, & though called "freight" did not properly bear that character.—KEITH v. BURROWS (1877), 2 App. Cas. 636; 46 L. 4651. —— Appointment of receiver.]—In an action in personam by pltf. claiming to be equitable mtgee. of the foreign ship F. & her freight to secure a liability incurred by him in accepting bills of exchange which had been drawn by the managing owner, it appeared that the alleged mtge. was given to pltf. by the managing owner; that pltf., when he accepted the bills, though the managing owner was sole owner, & that it was subsequently sworn on affidavit that the managing owner was only a part owner, but it did not appear whether the amount of the bills was in fact expended on the purposes of the ship.

The F. was in an English port under charter to carry cargo to a foreign port, when, on application by pltf., the judge made an order appointing a receiver & authorising him to proceed with the ship to the foreign port & there receive the ship & all the freight due upon the voyage. Defts. appealed:—Held: even assuming the managing owner to be only a part owner, yet, as it did not appear that the amount of the bills was not expended solely for the purposes of the ship, the ct. had authority to appoint a receiver to receive the whole of the freight, & in the circumstances, it was expedient that the order should stand.—BURN v. HERLOFSEN & SIEMENSEN, THE FAUST (1887), 56 L. 4655. ——.]—In July, 1853, pltf. being the owner of a ship sold it to D., of the firm of D. & co., for £4,725 & received in payment the draft of D. & co. on B. at twelve months date. In Sept. 1853, the ship sailed from London on a voyage to San Francisco & thence on a seeking voyage home. In June, 1854, the captain, who was sent out by D. to take charge of the vessel, chartered it to load a cargo of flour for Sydney. Some days before the bill of exchange became due D. & co. requested pltf. to renew it, & he consented to do so on having the vessel transferred to him as a security. The vessel was accordingly transferred to him by deed of assignment which was in the form of an absolute sale. In Oct. 1854, the captain, who had no knowledge of the assignment, received £1,000 on account of freight, & remitted it to D. & co. by a bill of exchange. In Nov. 1854, D. & co., who had acted as ship's husband, became bkpt.:—Held: (1) though the assignment was in form absolute, yet the ct. might look to the real nature of the transaction & see that it was by way of mtge. only; (2) pltf., being only a mtgee. & not having taken any step to obtain possession, was not entitled to the freight.—GARDNER v. CAZENOVE (1856), 1 H. & N. 423; 26 L. The captain sailed with the ship on her voyage to Sydney, with her certificate of registry on board; &, whilst the ship was at sea, the owner of the forty eight shares mtged. them to pltfs. A memorandum of the mtge. was registered at the custom house at Liverpool, & a note thereof was indorsed on the mtge. On arriving at Sydney subsequently to the date of the mtge., the captain, acting in his own right & on the power of attorney, sold the entirety of the ship to deft., who was resident at Sydney, & who registered the ship de novo at that port, & subsequently, at his own expense, freighted the ship with a cargo for London direct. She arrived in the London Docks. Pltfs. had no notice of the power of attorney given to the captain, & neither the captain nor deft. had any notice of the previous mtge. to pltfs. Pltfs. & deft. both took possession of the ship on her arrival at the London Docks, & pltfs. as mtgees., & deft. as purchaser, claimed the forty eight shares of the ship & of the freight: —Held: pltfs. were entitled to the shares both of the ship & of the freight paramount to deft., but subject to allowing him in account the proportion of the outfit of the ship & of the voyage to London.

(2) The mtgee. of a ship, who takes possession before the conclusion of the voyage, is entitled to the then accruing freight (PARKER, V.-C.).

(3) A mtgee. who takes possession of the ship at any time before the cargo is discharged comes with the rule. The right to the freight does not accrue until the goods are not only conveyed to their destination, but are also delivered (PARKER, V.-C.).

(4) When the mtge. is of the entirety, the mtgee. can take exclusive possession, so as to entitle himself to the freight. But when the mtge. is of a share only, he cannot effectually take possession, so as to entitle himself singly to receive the freight. In such a case, I consider that the mtgee., even without formally taking possession, if he gives notice of his mtge. to the part owners in possession of the ship, & requires payment to himself of the share of freight belonging to his mtged. share of the ship, would at least entitle himself to receive such share of all freight accruing & not actually due at the time of the notice (PARKER, V.-C.).—CATO v. IRVING (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 210; 21 L. 4666. —— As against creditors obtaining garnishee order.]—In Oct. 1883, W. mtged. to pltfs. certain shares in a ship. Subsequently W., who was captain & ship's husband of the ship, incurred liabilities to defts. for goods supplied to & disbursements made for the ship. In Mar. 1886, the ship was chartered for a voyage from Montreal to Liverpool, the freight being payable one third at Quebec & two thirds on right delivery of the cargo in Liverpool. Immediately upon arrival of the ship in Liverpool, pltfs. took possession & gave notice to the owners of the cargo to pay the freight to them. Defts. afterwards obtained judgment against W., & obtained garnishee orders upon the receivers of the cargo attaching the freight due from them:—Held: defts. had no right to the freight as against pltfs.—JAPP v. CAMPBELL (1887), 57 L. 4667. —— Prior unregistered mortgagee receiving freight as assignee—Right as against subsequent registered mortgagee—Freight assigned after notice of subsequent mortgage.]—On Oct. 28, 1892, S. being the registered owner of the B., executed a mtge. to the M. co., which recited that they had accepted drafts of S.'s firm for £20,000, & might make further advances from time to time to S. or on account or to order of him or his firm, & in order to secure the M. co. payment in cash upon demand of said advances, & any renewals of same, & any further or other payments or claims of any description which might be due or growing due. by S. or his firm to them on any account. S. covenanted to pay them the sums for the time being due on the mtge. whether by way of principal or interest; for the purpose of better securing to them "the payment of such sums as last aforesaid," he mtged. the ship B. This mtge. was registered as a mtge. to secure an account current on the day it was executed. On same day S., by letter, requested the M. co. to make him advances by acceptances, &, as security for same & any other advances whatsoever present or future, said he had mtged. or would mtge. the B. It was part of the arrangement that the amount covered by the bills should be reduced at the end of every six months. On Apr. 20, 1893, S. failed to make the due reduction. On May 15, he granted a second mtge. on the B. to T. Bros., which was registered on May 30. On Sept. 1, he, in consideration of a further advance, hypothecated to the M. co. an equal amount of the freight of the ship, which was then chartered to load a general cargo. He directed his agents at the port of discharge to pay that proportion of freight to the M. co., notice being given to T. Bros. He subsequently executed an assignment of the freight to the M. co. to secure advances for necessary disbursements. T. Bros. transferred their mtge. to pltf., on whose behalf an attachment was placed upon the freight. The ship was sold by the M. co., under their power of sale, & they paid themselves their advances under the first mtge. They further claimed out of the proceeds of the sale the subsequent advances secured by the assignment. Before making the further advances the M. co. had notice of the second mtge.:—Held: the last advances were covered by the first mtge., but the M. co. were not entitled to payment out of proceeds of the ship in priority to the claim of pltf. as assignee of T. Bros.—THE BENWELL TOWER (1895), 72 L. T. 664; 8 Asp. M. L. C. 13.

Resps. not having been paid for the coal supplied, claimed to be entitled to payment out of the freight which had been earned on the voyage to Monte Video & back:—Held: although the coal was used for the purpose of earning freight on that voyage, it was supplied to the mtgors., & not to applts., & therefore resps. were not entitled to payment out of the freight, which must be paid to applts. as mtgees.—EL ARGENTINO, [1909] P. 236; 78 L. H., at New Orleans with general instructions to do the best he could, either in loading the vessel on freight, or shipping cotton, on the joint account of S. & H. On those occasions as is usual when cotton is shipped on account of the shipowner, a nominal freight, or "no freight, being owner's property," was inserted in the bills of lading; but in stating the partnership accounts in respect of the sale of the cotton, the current rate of freight was charged in favour of S., & to the debit of the joint adventure. On Apr. 4, 1851, S. wrote to H. in these terms: "We hope you have bought cotton, & that the Ellen has arrived. What you do, we will confirm." Again on Apr. 26: "Whatever you do for the Ellen will be confirmed by us." On May 8, 1851, H. & C. H. shipped on board the Ellen 447 bales of cotton; & the master signed a bill of lading, by which the cotton was "to be delivered unto order or to assigns, he or they paying freight for the cotton 1*s.* per bale, being owner's property, when draft against same is paid, say £3,590 9*s.* 8*d.*, with primage & average accustomed." On May 15, H. & C. H. again shipped 381 bales of cotton & a similar bill of lading was signed by the master. The draft for £3,590 9*s.* 8*d.* dated May 8, 1851, was for the invoice price of the cotton, & was on the firm, of which S. was a partner, & was purchased on the day of its date, by pltfs., merchants at New Orleans, who took at 4701. —— Right as against holder of bills of lading—Bankruptcy of shipowners.]—In Dec. 1856, S. & F., of London, owners of the ship S., mortgaged it to pltf. to secure the repayment of £2,500, & assigned to him all the freights, earnings, gains, profits, & advantages to be made, earned & gotten by the ship, & authorised him to demand & recover all sums due for freight & earnings of the ship. At this time the S. was under charterparty to sail to Cuba & back, which voyage she performed, & on her arrival in England in 1857, default having been made in payment of the £2,500, pltf. put a stop order on the freight, whereupon S. & F. agreed that the future freight should be paid to him, & the captain was informed of this arrangement. In Oct. 1857, the S. was under charter to carry a cargo of coals to the West Indies, & S. & F. arranged with I. & co., of London, merchants, for a purchase of timber at M., in Cuba, to be supplied by T. & co. & to be sent home in the S., & for payment of which I. & co. had given a letter of credit on M. & co., of Havannah, undertaking to accept their drafts for the cost of the cargo, upon presentation against the shipping documents to be forwarded to I. & co. Owing to delay in the outward voyage, T. & co. disposed of the timber they had appropriated as the S.'s cargo, & when she reached M. there was no cargo ready. The captain, however, purchased through T. & co. a cargo on account of his owners, & on its being received on board gave to T. & co. a bill of lading, in part printed, by which he bound himself to deliver " in the like good order in the said port, or in such other my manifest may appoint, to order . . . who . . . on faithful delivery thereof being shown shall pay me for freight & conveyance. . . ." T. & co. sent an invoice to M. & co., which stated that the goods were shipped " by order of M. & co., of Havannah, & for account of risk of whom it may concern." M. & co. paid the amount of the invoice in their account with T. & co., & drew on I. & co. for the amount, & sent the bill of lading to them. I. & co. refused to honour the bills, & in consequence M. & co. arranged with deft. to accept & take them up for the honour of the drawer, which he did, receiving at the same time from I. & co. the bill of lading indorsed in blank by T. & co. S. & F. became bkpts. Upon an interpleader issue, which raised the question whether pltf. was legally or equitably entitled to any freight as against deft.:—Held: pltf. was entitled to freight under the assignment. —GUMM v. TYRIE (1865), 6 B. & S. 298; 5 New Rep. 413; 34 L. 4702. —— Right as against debenture holders.]—The directors of a shipping co. passed a resolution authorising its brokers to hypothecate the freight of two ships during their present voyages, to secure a present advance of sums not exceeding £5,000. Shortly afterwards the brokers transferred the freight of one of the ships to H. & co. to secure an advance of £3,000. The transfer was signed by the brokers as managers of the co., who also gave an undertaking to collect the freight as agents to H. & co. An action having been brought by the debenture holders of the co. for the enforcement of their securities, & the co. having gone into liquidation, H. & co. applied for an order that the liquidator of the co. should pay to appcts. out of moneys representing the freight of the ship in question the sum of £3,000:—Held: the co. had power under its arts. of assocn., & the resolutions passed pursuant thereto, notwithstanding the debenture debt, to specifically charge a particular asset for the purpose of carrying on the co.'s business; & H. & co.'s security was prior to that of the debenture holders.—WARD v. ROYAL EXCHANGE SHIPPING CO., Ex p. HARRISON (1887), 58 L. C. positively denied all notice of the mtge. of the freight:—Held: nevertheless, he had constructive notice thereof.—DOBSON v. LYALL (1837), 3 My. & Cr. 453, n.; 2 Ph. 323, n.; 6 L. J. On Mar. 24, the shipowner assigned the freight to C., who gave no notice to A. until Nov. following. It turned out that, on Mar. 23, A. had sub-chartered the ship to B., whose agent at Hong Kong had paid the freight to the agent there of the shipowner:—Held: A. was still liable to C. for the freight, & C.'s laches in giving notice had not deprived him of his rights.—YOUNG v. LINDSAY (1859), 27 Beav. 405; 54 E. 4712. —— Signing charterparty "as agents for owners"—Agents in fact principals.]—By a contract in charterparty form, dated Feb. 3, 1908, between pltfs., who were shipbrokers, & defts., who were timber merchants, in which pltfs. were described as agents for owners of a steamship to be named later, & defts. as charterers, it was agreed that the steamship should load at a foreign port, about the latter half of June, a cargo of timber from the agents of the charterers, & should deliver the same in London on being paid freight at a certain rate. The contract was signed by pltfs. "by authority of & as agents for owners." Pltfs. were not in fact acting for principals, nor had they made a contract for a steamship to carry the cargo, but were themselves principals in the transaction. This was, however, not known to defts. On May 22 pltfs. entered into a charterparty with shipowners for the charter of a steamship to carry the cargo, pltfs. being described therein as agents for charterers, at a rate of freight less than that specified in the contract of Feb. 3. Defts.' names were inserted by pltfs. in the charterparty as the charterers, & the charterparty was signed by pltfs. "as agents for merchants." In making the charter pltfs. were not in fact acting as agents for defts., but were themselves principals. The cargo was shipped under bills of lading reserving freight at the rate specified in the charter of May 22, & was duly delivered at the port of discharge, & the bills of lading freight was paid. In an action by pltfs. to recover the difference between the freight so paid & that reserved by the contract of Feb. 3, defts. contended that, as pltfs. had made that contract as agents, they were not entitled to sue upon it as principals:—Held: as pltfs. in making the contract of Feb. 3 had in fact no principals, but were themselves the principals, they were entitled to sue upon it & to recover the freight reserved thereby.—HARPER & CO. v. VIGERS BROTHERS, [1909] 2 K. 4715 i. General rule—On delivery of cargo.]—If goods are delivered to a carrier to be carried to a certain place he is not entitled to freight until delivery at that place; but if the consignee demand & take delivery at an intermediate place the carrier is then entitled to the full freight.—HUNT v. BARBOUR (1877), 3 V. After the ship's arrival in the port of London, & whilst the cargo was in course of delivery, a mtgee., under an ordinary statutory mtge., made prior to the date of the charterparty, took possession:—Held: he thereby acquired a right to the freight in priority over an assignee of the freight by a deed executed subsequently to the charterparty, notice of which had been given to the charterers.

4725. ——.]—Applts., consignees of a cargo of timber shipped at P. in Florida on the sailing vessel L. under a charterparty for delivery at Cardiff, claimed that they were under no liability for freight. Resp., master & owner of the L., & the crew had on May 3, 1917, under compulsion of an attack by a German submarine, left the L. in circumstances which, as held in Bradley v. Newsom, No. 4809, post, did not amount to abandonment without any intention of resuming possession, but the vessel was salved, & on June 16, 1917, towed to Queenstown, when possession for resp. was resumed. She was to have been towed to Cardiff, but on Aug. 14 she was, through the negligence of the resp., seriously damaged by collision. Applts. desired to have delivery of the timber, & before & after the date of the collision interviews & correspondence took place between the ship's agents, the Salvage Assocn. & solrs. acting on behalf of applts., & surveys of the ship were made as to dealing with the cargo & vessel. On Aug. 31, 1917, resp.'s agent asked (inter alia), whether applts. would approve discharging the cargo at Queenstown for the purpose of effecting possibly necessary repairs. The master made additional inquiries as to the cost of discharging the cargo, but took no further steps, & by their action commenced on Oct. 29, 1917, applts., the cargo owners, claimed delivery of the cargo without liability to pay freight:—Held: it was for the captain & owner of the ship to arrange for the carriage of the cargo to Cardiff if he wished to earn freight, & he had no right to ask for freight pro rata itineris on delivery at Queenstown; having failed to act with reasonable promptitude, his inaction was equivalent to a refusal to deliver, & as the voyage was never completed, no freight was payable.—DENNY, MOTT & DICKSON, LTD. v. BENVENUTO (1921), 55 I. 4726 i. Payment of freight & delivery of cargo must be concurrent.]—The payment of the freight & the delivery of the cargo are concomitant acts which neither party is bound to perform unless the other is ready to perform the correlative act, & the master of a vessel therefore cannot insist on payment in full of his freight on a cargo of coal before delivering any portion thereof.—BEARD v. BROWN (1871), 15 L. C. J. 136.—CAN.

4731 i. Right of shipowner to detain cargo—Until payment of freight.]—A cargo of coal was consigned to B. & the master of the vessel refused to deliver it unless the freight was prepaid, which B. refused but offered to pay it ton by ton as delivered. By direction of the owner's agent the coal was taken out of the vessel & stored, whereupon B. tendered the amount of the freight & demanded it, but the agent still refused to deliver unless the cost of storage was paid. In trover against the master:—Held: the refusal of the agent after tender of the full freight was a conversion of the cargo for which trover would lie.—WINCHESTER v. BUSBY (1889), 16 S. C. R. 336.—CAN.

PART VIII. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 3.—B.

a. Freight payable on return of bill of lading receipted by consignee—Delivery at intermediate port—Unqualified receipt endorsed.]—Goods having been shipped to a certain port, freight being payable by the consignor on return of the bill of lading receipted by the consignee, the vessel was unable to deliver at that port, & the consignee took delivery at an intermediate port,

4738. Freight payable on delivery of bill of lading.]—Declaration "that in consideration that pltf. has taken deft.'s goods on board his ship to be carried to A., deft. promised "to pay the money due for freight & carriage of the same on the delivery of the bill of lading"; that the bill of lading was delivered, by reason whereof deft. became liable to pay a large sum, to wit, £20 for freight & carriage of the said goods":—Held: bad on demurrer, because it did not appear that anything became due for freight on the delivery of the bill of lading.—BLAKEY v. DIXON (1800), 2 Bos. & P. 321; 126 E. 4740. Freight payable two months after right delivery.]—A memorandum of charter provided that a vessel should ship goods for Kingston, or any other port in Jamaica, & having discharged the same, should receive on board a cargo from thence or from a portion the Spanish main if required, & deliver the same at a port in the United Kingdom on being paid freight £250 in ten days after sailing from Gravesend, & £750 more in two months after a right delivery of the homeward cargo, provided she should be required to proceed to one port only in Jamaica, & £25 more should she be required to go to two or more ports in that island; & in case the vessel should be ordered to the Spanish main, £4 per day was to be paid for every day after the twenty-fifth, after her arrival at Jamaica, until dispatched from her loading port; demurrage £100 per month, or in proportion for a less period, payable on settlement of the hire of the vessel.

In assumpsit on the memorandum of charter, the declaration averred that the vessel after discharging a portion of her outward cargo at Kingston, & the rest at another port in Jamaica, sailed thence to a port on the Spanish main, to receive a homeward cargo, & was detained there one hundred & thirty-nine days after the twenty-fifth day of her arrival at Jamaica, & alleged for breach the non-payment of the £4 per day, for the one hundred & thirty-nine days.

The plea stated, that the vessel never delivered her homeward cargo at any port of discharge in the United Kingdom:—Held: the £4 per day was not payable until two months after the delivery of the homeward cargo.—CROZIER v. SMITH (1840), 1 Man. & G. 407; 1 Scott, N. R. 338; 4 Jur. 581; 133 E. R. 392.

4741. Freight "payable in London"—Whether on ship's arrival or on receipt of goods—Question for jury.]—Goods were put on board a ship consigned for Calcutta, at 39*s.* per ton, "payable in London":—Held: it was for the jury to say from the surrounding circumstances whether the contract was a contract for "freight," contingent on the ship's arrival at her destination, or for a sum payable on the receipt of the goods on board her.—LIDGETT v. PERRIN (1861), 11 C. B. N. S. 362; 142 E. R. 837; subsequent proceedings (1862), 2 F. & F. 763, N. P.

4742. Freight payable within three days of arrival—Cargo destroyed after arrival but before delivery.]—Defts. shipped cement under a bill of lading which stipulated that freight should be paid "within three days after arrival of ship, & before delivery of any portion of the goods." The ship arrived in port with the cement on board, but was within the three days, in consequence of an accidental fire, scuttled with a view to the saving of ship & cargo; & on her being raised, the cement was found to be useless, having ceased to exist as cement, & the consignees refused to accept it, or to pay freight:—Held: the shipowners, not being ready to perform their part of the contract, were not entitled to sue for freight.—DUTHIE v. HILTON (1868), L. R. 4 C. P. 138; 38 L. J. C. P. 93; 19 L. T. 285; 17 W. R. 55; 3 Mar. L. C. 166.

4746. Freight payable on weight at port of discharge—Ship or cargo lost or not lost.]—A bill of lading provided—"freight . . . to be paid as per margin, & to be collected on the gross weights, measurements, or number taken at the port of discharge, & according to the conditions stated in the co.'s tariff, it being expressly agreed that freight is to be considered as earned, & must be paid ship &/or cargo lost or not lost." Owing to a collision sea water entered the hold & dissolved a portion of the cargo, which was nitrate. The shipowners sued for the freight on the amount, agreed between parties, of the cargo so lost:—Held: such freight was due.—PACIFIC STEAM NAVIGATION CO. v. THOMSON, AIKMAN & CO., LTD., [1920] S. C. (H. L.) 159.

4747. Where no provision in charterparty—Right to reasonable amount—Damaged goods & endorsed an unqualified receipt on the bill of lading:—Held: the shipowner was entitled to full freight, as against the consignor.—HUNT v. BARBOUR (1877), 3 V. L. R. (L.) 189.—AUS.

b. Freight payable at port of shipment—"Ship lost or not lost."]—Goods were shipped at G. upon bills of lading which stated that freight was payable at G. & contained a stipulation that "freight when payable by the shipper is to be considered as earned, ship or goods lost or not lost," & the vessel in which the goods were shipped stranded within half an hour of leaving G., & became a total wreck:—Held: the freight became payable by the shipper immediately the ship was lost.—UNION S.S. CO., LTD. v. WICKES, LTD. (1909), 28 N. Z. L. R. 584.—N.Z.

c. Freight payable on delivery of certificate of quantity of goods shipped.]—By charterparty it was stipulated that two-thirds of the freight should be paid by a firm in G. (not the shippers) on production to them by the master of the vessel of a certificate from a firm in N. of the quantity of goods shipped. The firm in G., by letter addressed to the owners, bound themselves to make such payment on production of such certificate:—Held: it was no ground for withholding payment that the firm in G. had been interpelled doing so by the shippers, in respect of an alleged breach of the charterparty on the part of the owners, but the obligation to pay became a liquid obligation the moment the certificate was produced.—STEWART & Co. v. DENNISTOUN (1854), 16 Dunl. 4750. Provision for alternative lump freight—If ship compelled to unload outside harbour—Part of cargo only discharged outside harbour — Right to larger freight.]—Pltfs. agreed with defts. to convey a cargo to Oporto, & if the river was in possession of an enemy, to unload at F., outside the harbour. The freight was to be £475; or, if the vessel could enter Oporto, discharge, & reload there £300 only: twenty-five days were allowed for unloading. Pltfs. arrived at F. June 2, & an enemy being in possession of the river, commenced unloading there. The vessel was detained at F., partly for the convenience of defts., & partly by bad weather, till Aug. 25, & by that time had discharged seven-eighths of her cargo. The enemy then having quitted the river, she entered Oporto, where she discharged the remaining eighth of her cargo. In July, defts.' agent at Oporto gave pltfs. a bill for the larger freight. In Sept. the vessel obtained, at Oporto, a full cargo for England:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to the larger freight, & to demurrage from June 28.—GIBBENS v. BUISSON (1834), 1 Bing. N. 4759. What may be deducted—Advances made by agent abroad—When made in accordance with charterparty.]—T. chartered a ship, then on an outward voyage, to load a cargo at a port of Cuba for London, agreeing that his agent should make such advances at Cuba as he might think the ship required. The master gave a bottomry bond on ship & freight before she reached Cuba. Certain sums were advanced by charterer's agent at Cuba. Ship was arrested at suit of bondholder in London. T. brought in freight less the sum so advanced at Cuba:—Held: such sums having been paid in pursuance of a contract, the payment was a good one, & the charterer was entitled to deduct the amount from the gross freight.—THE STANDARD (1857), Sw. 267; 30 L. T. O. S. 219; 6 W. R. 222; 166 E. R. 1130.

Annotation:—Apld. The Salacia (1862), Lush. 578.

4760. —— —— ——.]—A ship was chartered to go to a port of loading, there to load & return; freight payable, as per tale. On the voyage out, the master hypothecated the ship & the cargo to be shipped, & the freight as per charter. Subsequently, at the port of loading, advances for ship's expenses were made to the master by the charterers' agent, with notice of the bond; & on the voyage home the master sold part of the charterers' goods to pay other expenses of the ship:—Held: in computing the amount of freight to be paid into ct. by the charterers, to answer the bond, (a) the charterers might deduct advances made abroad by their agent according to the charter, & by the charter to be deducted on settlement of the freight; (b) they should not be required to pay the sum which would have been payable as freight upon the goods sold, had the goods arrived; (c) the charterers should not deduct from the freight, as per tale, advances by their agent, which were not authorised by the lumber from B. to M., until the close of navigation. After some correspondence between pltfs. & deft.'s agent, she was sent for the last trip to C., & there took in a load of corn for M., which brought £170 less freight than a cargo of timber from B. would have done:—Held: the letters, set out in the case, contained no agreement on deft.'s part to pay such difference; but pltfs.' remedy was on the original contract.—MCPHERSON v. CAMERON (1857), 15 U. C. R. 48.—CAN.

f. Failure to provide cargo — Right to full freight—Allowance for proportionate part of expenses of carriage saved.]—Deft. agreed to ship goods for a certain port, in a ship of which pltfs. were the sub-charterers, but failed to ship any portion of the goods, & pltfs. were unable to obtain any freight. In an action to recover the whole amount of the freight which would have been payable to pltfs. if the contract had been carried out:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to recover as damages a sum equivalent to the freight agreed to be paid by deft. for the goods in question, after deducting therefrom a proportionate part of the expenses of carriage which had been saved by reason of the service not having been rendered; & the sum payable by pltfs. to the original charterers of the vessel for the intended voyage ought not to be deducted from the sum payable by deft., as the damages payable by deft. must depend upon his own contract with pltfs., & not upon the terms of the bargain between pltfs. & the original charterers.—DE ANGLIS & CO. v. MAYAPPA SETTY (1879), I. 4761. —— Charterparty providing for advances for disbursements at port of loading—Deduction of disbursements on voyage.]—A ship was abandoned to underwriters as a total loss. By the charterparty it was agreed that cash for the ship's disbursements at her port of loading should be advanced by the charterers, "ship paying 2½ per cent. commission including insurance": —Held: the cost of coals bought during the voyage for the purpose of the voyage, & paid for by the master's draft maturing after the date of abandonment, was not to be deducted from the gross freight.—THE RED SEA, [1895] P. 293; 64 L. 4763. —— —— How calculated—Where advances for disbursements.]—Pltfs., as owners, chartered a steamer of defts. by a charterparty which, after providing for the rate of freight, contained the clause: "The freight, less advances, if any, to be paid on unloading & right delivery of th cargo in cash, but if ordered outside the United Kingdom to discharge, in London concurrent with discharge, but, in any case, subject to two months' discount at 5 per cent. per annum." A further clause provided: "Money for steamer's ordinary disbursements, not exceeding one-fourth of estimated freight, to be advanced, if required by the captain, at the port of loading by the charterers . . . to be indorsed on bills of lading, if required, & deducted from the freight at settlement":—Held: the 5 per cent. discount was to be calculated not on the whole amount of the freight but on that amount less advances for disbursements.—KOKUSAI KISEN KAISHA v. DREYFUS (LOUIS) & Co. (1926), 43 T. L. R. 131, C. A.

4764. Excess cargo shipped by charterers under protest—Over amount specified in charterparty—No right to freight in respect of excess.]—A charterparty provided that a ship should proceed to the port of loading & there load "a cargo of beans, not less than 6,500 tons, but not exceeding 7,000 tons net intake weight of beans in bags, as usual, which the charterers bind themselves to ship not exceeding what she can reasonably stow & carry over & above her cabin bunkers, tackle, apparel, provisions & furniture." It also contained the following clause, "Charterers to have the option of underletting the whole or part of the steamer":—Held: (1) the words "not less than 6,500 tons" constituted a warranty by the shipowners to the charterers that the vessel could carry that quantity, & the words "not exceeding 7,000 tons" was a term binding the shipowners not to ask for more than 7,000 tons but entitling them to receive that quantity if within the capacity of the vessel; (2) having in fact shipped under duress & protest a larger quantity of cargo than that required by the terms of the charterparty, the charterers were entitled to have the excess quantity carried freight free.—JARDINE, MATHESON & Co. v. CLYDE SHIPPING CO., [1910] 1 K. the owners of a Danish ship against the indorsees of the bill of lading for freight on the cargo delivered to them at the port of discharge in Scotland, defenders averred that they had not received the full cargo specified in the bill of lading granted by the master at Riga, the port of shipment, & pleaded that they were entitled to retain from freight the value of the deficiency, alleging that by Danish law (the law of the flag) the bill of lading was conclusive against the owners. After a proof, which showed that the indorsees of the bill of lading had only agreed to pay for so much of the cargo as was delivered to them:—Held: defenders had only become indorsees of the bill of lading to the extent of the cargo actually on board the vessel, & were not entitled to retain any part of the freight.—IMMANUEL (OWNERS) v. DENHOLM & Co. 4767. —— ——.]—CULBERTSON v. HUTCHINSON (1850), 6 L. T. 868.

4768. —— —— Master declining to repair ship or tranship cargo.]—If a bill of lading is given by the master of a foreign vessel, the agreements to be implied as to the duty of the master to carry on, tranship or deliver the goods at an intermediate port of refuge, will be ascertained by reference to the law of the flag which the vessel carried, & not by reference to the lex loci contractus, or the lex fori or the law of the place where the breach of contract by the master is alleged to have been committed.

If a vessel during her voyage suffers sea damage, & is compelled to put into a port of refuge, then by the law of England the master is not bound to tranship. He is allowed a reasonable time either to repair & carry on or to tranship. If he absolutely declines to do either, he may be called upon to deliver without payment of any freight; but before a reasonable time has elapsed, he cannot be required to deliver, except on payment of full freight or waiver thereof.

In estimating what is reasonable time, the ct. will take all circumstances into consideration, including any delay caused by the vis. major of competent authority, whether administrative or judicial.

A bill of lading in English was given by the master of the French vessel Bahia, lying in New York, by which the goods were made deliverable at Dunkirk in France. The vessel during her voyage suffered sea damage, & put into the port of Ramsgate in England, Jan. 7, 1863. The cargo was there unladen, & the ship surveyed. The surveyors reported that the cost of repairs would exceed the value of the ship repaired. The master executed a deed of abandonment of the ship to the French Vice-Consul granted, as in ordinary course the certificate of innavigability required by French law as sanctioning the abandonment, the French underwriters instituted proceedings in the tribunal of commerce at Marseilles, & obtained an order for the ship to be taken to Dunkirk to be repaired, & the Vice-Consul was then ordered by the Consul-General to withhold the certificate of innavigability. The owner of the ship appealed from the decree of the tribunal of commerce to a higher ct. The owners of the cargo offered the master full freight, less expenses of carrying on the cargo to Dunkirk, & demanded delivery at Ramsgate. This was refused, & they then, Mar. 13, 1863, arrested the ship. Subsequently the cargo was obtained from the master's possession without his consent, & carried to Dunkirk. Proceedings were then taken in France by the owner of the Bahia against the cargo to recover the original freight, & the ct. there pronounced that the owners of the cargo "having withdrawn their goods in consequence of being unwilling to wait the solution of the question whether the vessel could or could not be put into a proper condition, owed the whole freight":—Held: in these circumstances the reasonable time allowed to the master had not elapsed at the time of action brought; he had committed no breach of contract, & the suit was dismissed with costs.—THE BAHIA (1864), Brown. & Lush. 292; 5 New Rep. 221; 12 L. 4769. —— —— Voyage becoming illegal.]—Pltfs., owners of a British ship, agreed with charterers to carry goods from Tampa, in Florida, to Hamburg. On Aug. 3, 1914, the ship, on sighting the Lizard, was warned by the Admlty. to take the goods to an English port, & on the next day war was declared between Gt. Britain & Germany. The continuation of the voyage to Hamburg having become illegal & impossible, the cargo was discharged at Runcorn & deposited with warehousemen, subject to a lien for freight. Defts., owners of the cargo, discharged the lien under protest, & took their goods away. In a claim by pltfs. for freight to Hamburg, or, alternatively, freight pro rata itineris:—Held: they were not entitled to the former because they had not completed the voyage, nor to the latter because no new agreement between pltfs. & defts. to give & take delivery at Runcorn instead of Hamburg could be inferred from the fact that defts. had taken the goods at Runcorn.—ST. 4780. —— ——.]—Where a vessel is disabled at an intermediate port, the master is allowed a reasonable time to reship & tranship, so as to earn his freight. The whole freight is payable if, by default of the owner of the cargo, the master is prevented forwarding the cargo from an intermediate port to its destination. No freight is payable if the owner of a cargo is compelled against his will to take the cargo at an intermediate port. To sustain a claim for pro rata freight, there must be such a voluntary acceptance of the goods by their owner at an intermediate port as to raise a fair inference that further carriage of the goods was dispensed with.

A vessel was chartered at a port in Sweden to carry a cargo of deals to Bordeaux, freight being payable on delivery. She became disabled, & on Oct. 2, 1865, was towed by three smacks into an English port; a salvage suit was instituted, Oct. 7, & the vessel was arrested by order of the ct. The master employed shipbrokers at the port as agents for the owners of the vessel; & through the agent for the Norwegian Lloyd's Assocn. instructed proctors to enter an appearance in the salvage suit for the owners of the ship & the cargo. Notice was sent by the agents & by the proctors to the owners of the cargo, informing them of the condition of the ship, & that the cargo would be sold, but no instructions were received from them. The cargo was discharged, &, the vessel being found not worth repairing, the master & crew, Oct. 24, abandoned her. The cargo was sold, Dec. 16, by order of this ct., & out of the proceeds a sum was awarded to the salvors. The ship had been abandoned to the proprietors of the graving dock. On a motion by the owners of the vessel for payment of freight pro rata out of the balance remaining in the registry:—Held: the owners of the cargo having had notice that their cargo would be sold, had waived their right to have their cargo carried to Bordeaux, & thereby impliedly promised to pay a pro rata freight; the proctors' costs were the first charge upon the fund in ct.; the agents employed at the port were entitled to such part of their charges as consisted of necessaries supplied to the ship, but not to such disbursements as were in the nature of general average expenses.

The master has a possessory lien on the cargo for its share of general average expenses, but a ship agent has no such lien upon ship, freight or cargo, nor a right of action in rem against any of them.—THE SOBLOMSTEN (1866), L. (c) Ship Abandoned.

4804. General rule — No freight payable.] — Where a ship, injured by collision without fault of her master & crew, is abandoned by them, & is afterwards taken possession of & brought in safety into port by salvors, who institute a suit against ship & cargo, the shipowner, having by the abandonment put an end to his contract, loses all claim to have the cargo put into his possession to enable him to carry it on, & so earn his freight, & all claim to be paid full freight out of the proceeds of the cargo if sold by order of the ct. Nor can the shipowner have any claim for pro rata freight unless there be a new contract express or implied to pay the same, & if the shipowner refuses to consent to a sale of the cargo by the ct. when applied for by the salvors & owner of cargo, unless he be paid full freight, no such contract can be implied.—THE KATHLEEN (1874), L. of the sea, abandoned by her crew off the American coast. She was afterwards saved by another vessel, & brought with her cargo by the salvors into a port in England, & there arrested in an action for salvage by her salvors. Before the shipowner had released the ship or cargo, the owners of the cargo applied for & obtained from the Admlty. Ct. an order for the release of the cargo to them without payment of any freight, upon their giving bail to the salvors:—Held: the cargo owners were entitled to treat the contract of affreightment as at an end, & therefore the order of the Admlty. 4808. What constitutes abandonment—Return to ship prevented by salving ship.]—Where a salving ship takes a crew off a vessel in distress & puts men on board of her, refusing to allow her own crew to return, & the two vessels are in company navigated into port, there is no such abandonment of the ship as to put an end to the contract of carriage, & consequently there will be freight due upon the consignees requiring delivery of the cargo, such freight being pro rata, assuming the port not to be the port to which the cargo ought to have been taken under the contract of carriage.—THE LEPTIR (1885), 52 L. 4809. —— Ship presumed sunk by enemy submarine—Subsequent recovery.]—Pltfs. were the indorsees of a bill of lading signed on behalf of defts., the owners of the ship J., for the voyage of a cargo of wood to be delivered at Hull on payment of freight as per charterparty. The J., while off the coast of Scotland, was on Oct. 7, 1916, torpedoed by a German submarine, & the crew were compelled to take to their boats under threat of being shot. The enemy placed bombs on board the J., & the last the crew saw of the vessel led them to believe that she was sinking. The crew were picked up & landed at Aberdeen on Oct. 8, & the master at once telegraphed to the owners: "Ship sunk yesterday. Submarine." On Oct. 9 the owner's agents wrote to pltfs., quoting the following letter from the owner: ". . . I advise you of the loss of my steamship Jupiter, which steamer was sunk by enemy submarine on Saturday last. . . ." The vessel was subsequently found a waterlogged derelict & towed into Leith, where she was on Oct. 11 taken possession of by the Receiver of Wrecks. On the same day pltfs. claimed to elect to take possession of their cargo where the steamer was, & asserted that no freight was payable by them. In an action to recover the freight:—Held: the master & crew had not abandoned the ship in such circumstances as to indicate an intention not to perform the contract, & the owner's agents' letter of Oct. 9 was not a notice of the abandonment of the contract such as entitled the cargo owners to receive the cargo free of freight.—BRADLEY v. NEWSOM (H.) 4813. ——— ———.] — Pltfs. as shipowners chartered a steamer, the Siljan, to charterers now represented by the Board of Trade for a voyage from New York to certain ports in South Africa including Beira. The steamer's own tackle was not able to deal with weight of more than 5 tons, at New York certain railway machinery destined for Beira was put on board, individual consignments of the machinery weighing much more than 5 tons. On arrival at Beira the steamer was not able to discharge those heavy consignments with her own tackle, & there were no appliances at the port by which discharge could be effected. In these circumstances, the steamer was sent, without prejudice to the right of the parties, to Durban to be unloaded, & the goods were subsequently forwarded to Beira by another steamer. Pltfs. claimed the outstanding balance of freight, & the charterers, having paid the extra expenses entailed by having the goods unloaded at Durban, claimed the right to set off the amount of the expense so incurred. The matter was referred to arbn. & the umpire awarded in favour of pltfs., subject to the decision of a special case:—Held: (1) on the evidence, the charterers had waived any right they might have had under the cesser clause, & it was the charterers themselves who arranged for the steamer to be sent to Durban; (2) the charterers were the shippers under the bill of lading, & as such were liable for the freight independently of the charterparty; (3) the shipowners had under the charterparty ample powers of transhipment & as the goods did reach their destination in the end freight had become payable: (4) by express provisions of the charterparty the charterers were liable for the freight.—REDERI AKT. She went aground on the coast of Ireland. Subsequently she was got off with her cargo, both being damaged. S., one of defts., & who represented the freighters, visited the vessel, & was requested by the master "to act on behalf of the owners to the best of his judgment & ability." S. caused the cargo to be taken out, & sent back to Liverpool in another ship, which he himself engaged for that purpose. The ship herself went to Dublin, & was there repaired. When the goods arrived at Liverpool they were inspected by various persons, & the result was, that defts. on account of their damaged condition, determined to sell them. Before the sale took place, however, the master claimed the entire freight on the goods to the port of destination, or that they should be detained to proceed in his vessel, when she was repaired. Defts. refused to accede to this, & proceeded to sell the goods. In an action by the master against defts. for wrongfully preventing him from carrying the goods & earning freight, the jury found, in effect, that the course taken by defts. was the reasonable one to take, having regard to the interests of all parties concerned:—Held: on this finding defts. were entitled to the verdict; the authority to S. to act for the owners as well as for the shippers gave him authority to sell the cargo, under the circumstances which the jury had found to exist; & this authority, having been partially acted on & expenses incurred under it, could not be countermanded.

It [right of shipowner to full freight] is inapplicable to a case where the goods are taken back absolutely & unconditionally by consent of both sides, the further carriage of the goods being intentionally dispensed with; & ordinarily in such a case the shipowner becomes entitled to freight pro rata itineris (WILLIAMS, J.).—BLASCO v. FLETCHER (1863), 14 C. p. Refusal of master to tranship or deliver without payment of distance freight.]—By a charterparty on an ordinary English printed form, made in London, between the London broker of deft., a Norwegian shipowner, & an English trading co., it was agreed that deft.'s ship A., of Norway, should proceed to Rangoon & there load a cargo of teak, & from there proceed to Queenstown or Falmouth for orders, the freight to be paid "by one-third in cash on ship's arrival at port of discharge & the remainder on unloading & right delivery of cargo in cash." The ship duly proceeded to Rangoon & there loaded a cargo of teak, but in the course of her voyage from Rangoon was wrecked on the shores of Table Bay, & became totally lost. The greater part of the cargo having been salved, pltfs., as holders of bills of lading for the cargo, were willing that the master should tranship the cargo to its destination, but the master refused to tranship the cargo or to deliver it to pltfs. without payment of distance freight according to Norwegian law:—Held: pltfs. were not liable for distance freight, as the intention of the parties was to make an English contract, & the payment of freight being expressly dealt with in the charterparty, none was payable on the cargo landed in Cape Town.—SEARIGHT & Co. v. MARCHÜSSEN (1897), 14 S. Charterers' liability was to cease "when cargo is shipped & bills of lading signed, provided all the conditions called for in this charter have been fulfilled, but vessel to have a lien on the cargo for freight, dead freight & demurrage." Any difference between the charterparty & bills of lading freight was to be settled at the port of loading on clearance of the vessel if required by the master. The amount due under this clause was ascertained at the port of loading, & paid by the charterers to the shipowners. The vessel loaded a full cargo, but on the voyage she grounded & a portion of the cargo was lost. The remainder was delivered at the port of discharge & the bills of lading freight on the whole cargo shipped was collected by the shipowners. In an action by the charterers to recover, as money received to their use, the difference between the freight so collected by the shipowners & the amount due to them under the charterparty in respect of the cargo delivered:—Held: under the charterparty the shipowners were not entitled to a lump sum freight, & the balance of freight in their hands could be recovered from them by the charterers.

4839. —— Cargo shipped less than stated in bill of lading.]—To an action for a lump sum for freight by the master of a ship against the indorsee of a bill of lading defts. pleaded, except as to 217 tons of cargo, that by the bill of lading pltf. acknowledged himself to have received a number of tons exceeding 217 tons, & that he did not carry or deliver the goods in the bill of lading mentioned, but only a portion, to wit, 217 tons (not alleging in terms that he did not carry all the goods delivered). Pltf. replied that he carried all the goods delivered to him under the bill of lading, & that the goods so delivered & described in the bill of lading as weighing more than 217 tons in fact weighed 217 tons only, & that the weight mentioned in the bill of lading was a mere misdescription, inserted without fraud or default; that the bill of lading was made in France, & that, according to the law of France, the whole freight was payable, although part only of the goods was carried & delivered:—Held: in an action for freight, the master is at liberty (notwithstanding Bills of Lading Act, 1855 (c. 111), s. 3), to show that the cargo actually received by him differs in weight from that signed for in the bill of lading, at all events where the weight mentioned in the bill of lading is mere matter of measurement; & the freight being a lump sum pltf. was entitled to recover the whole.—BLANCHET v. POWELL'S LLANTIVIT COLLIERIES CO., LTD. 4846. —— —— Freight payable "on right delivery."]—By a charterparty, on an ordinary English printed form, negotiated & made in London between the London broker of pltf., a German shipowner domiciled in Germany, & defts., merchants in London, it was agreed that pltf.'s ship, which was under German colours, with a German master, & then in a French port, should proceed to Akyab, Rangoon or Bassein, according to orders, & there load, from defts.' agents, a cargo of rice, & being so loaded proceed to Scilly, Falmouth, Plymouth, or Cowes for orders to discharge in the United Kingdom or on the Continent between Havre & Hamburg, "freight being payable at & after the rate of 35*s.* sterling per ton of 20 cwt. net delivered. . . . The act of God, the Queen's enemies, restraints of princes & rulers, fire & all & every other dangers & accidents of the seas, rivers & navigation of whatever nature & kind soever, during said voyage always excepted. . . . The freight to be paid on right delivery of cargo if discharged in the United Kingdom; in cash or as customary . . . & if on the Continent, in cash at the exchange of the day of final discharge without discount." The vessel proceeded to Bassein, & there loaded a cargo of rice belonging to defts., the master signing a bill of lading making the rice deliverable to defts.' order, freight & all other conditions as per charterparty. On the voyage the vessel met with heavy weather, & her master for the safety of ship & cargo put into Port Elizabeth, where a portion of the cargo was found to be so much damaged by sea water that, on survey, it was condemned as unfit for reshipment & sold by the master. Pltf. sued defts. for full freight on the portion of the cargo so sold at the port of distress:—Held: defts. were not liable as the intention of the parties was to make an English contract, &, the payment of freight being expressly dealt with in the charterparty, none was payable on the portion of the cargo sold in the port of distress.—THE INDUSTRIE, [1894] P. 58; 63 L. 4847. Recovery of pro rata freight—From holders of bills of lading—Where special agreement to pay.]—P. was the owner of a ship which took in a cargo at Calcutta, to be carried thence to St. Petersburg, where P. resided. This cargo was purchased on account of P. by E., his supercargo & agent, but the house of F. & Co. of Calcutta advanced £26,000 towards the purchase thereof & of the cargo of another ship belonging to P., &, for their security, bills of lading of the first-mentioned cargo were signed by the captain, as shipped by F. & co. on account of P., to be delivered at St. Petersburg, to the order of F. & co., or their assigns. The words, "he or they paying freight," which, in the bills of lading, immediately followed the direction for delivering to the order of F. & co., were struck out. These bills were delivered to F. & co., & indorsed & transmitted by them to defts., their correspondents in London. Before the ship sailed from Calcutta, a memorandum for charter was entered into between E. & the captain, whereby it was agreed that the ship should be dispatched with a complete cargo, should proceed to St. Petersburg, & there deliver the same to the order of the freighter on payment of freight at a specified rate. The ship, in the course of her voyage, was lost, but there was a salvage of part of the cargo, which was sold with the assent of the captain, & produced the net sum of £13,300. In Apr. 1816, defts., as holders of the bills of lading, applied for the proceeds of the salvage, but pltfs. had put a stop thereon on the part of P., & the captain, as agent of P., claimed a lien thereupon for pro rata freight. On July 12, 1816, the memorandum for charter not being then forthcoming, & defts. being then in possession of the bills of lading, by letter to pltfs. agreed that, in consideration of pltfs. handing to defts. the captain's order in defts.' favour for the proceeds of the cargo of his late ship, & a letter from pltfs. to those who had sold the cargo, withdrawing any claim on account of P., defts. would hold themselves accountable for pltfs., as the agents of P., for whatever might appear to be due for the pro rata freight, according to the charterparty entered into at Calcutta between E. & the captain. Pltfs. performed their part of the agreement, & defts., in consequence, received the proceeds of the salvage, but refused to pay the pro rata freight:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to recover in assumpsit on the agreement of July, 1816, the amount of the pro rata freight.—THORNTON v. FAIRLIE (1818), 8 Taunt. 354; 2 Moore, C. P. 397; 129 E. R. 419.

4848. —— What must be proved—Option of cargo owner to accept cargo at place of sale.]—The mere temporary suspension of the voyage by reason of the necessity of repairing the ship at a port of refuge does not, as between the shipowner & the owner of cargo, warrant an average adjustment at the intermediate port. To entitle a shipowner, in the absence of a special contract, to demand pro rata freight, where the goods have been sold at an intermediate port, being so much damaged as not to be worth forwarding, it must be shown that the owner of the goods had an option of having them sent on or of accepting them at such intermediate port. A ship sailed from Riga for Hull with a general cargo & was stranded, but was afterwards got off, part of the cargo having been washed out of her & part jettisoned, & towed into Copenhagen, where her cargo was discharged, & the ship having been repaired at considerable expense, was sent on to Hull after a delay of about two months, with some of her cargo on board, other part having been sent on by the master in other vessels. Pltfs.' goods were so much damaged as not to be worth sending on, & were, properly, but without pltfs. having an opportunity of exercising an option, sold at Copenhagen, & an average adjustment took place there according to Danish law, under which pltfs. were charged with pro rata freight from Riga to Copenhagen. In an action for the price realised by the sale at Copenhagen:—Held: (1) the shipowners were not entitled to deduct the general average expenses ascertained by the adjustment at Copenhagen, nor pro rata freight.

(2) The duty of the shipowner is to complete the voyage if he can. If owing to perils of the seas he is compelled to put into an intermediate port for repair, his duty is, to refit, & carry on such part of the original cargo as is fit to be carried on (LINDLEY, J.).

(3) If the shipowner, being unable to repair his ship, tranships the cargo & sends it home in some other ship, which he may do, still, as between him & the original consignees of the cargo, the original voyage is treated as continuing, in the absence of some agreement to the contrary (LINDLEY, J.).—HILL v. WILSON (1879), 4 C. (2) The true test of the right to freight is the question whether the service in respect of which the freight was contracted to be paid has been substantially performed (WILLES, C.J.).

(3) If the shipowner fails to carry the goods for the merchant to the destined port, the freight is not earned. In taking the accounts between pltfs. & defts., the ship's husbands, the chief clerk charged them with the freight of the bricks, although they had received no part of it; & a motion by those defts. to vary was dismissed, with costs.

4881. —— ——.]—By a charterparty, made between deft. & H., a ship was chartered to proceed to Madras & load a cargo there from the agents of H., & being so loaded proceed to London & deliver the same on being paid freight at £3 15*s.* a ton, etc.; "the captain to sign bills of lading for his cargo for any rate of freight required, without prejudice to this charterparty." C. S., who acted as agent of H. at Madras in respect of the charterparty, by his directions purchased sugars & loaded them on board. The captain, at the request of C. S., signed a bill of lading, deliverable to the order of C. S. at £1 per ton freight. H. stopped payment & never paid for the sugar. The sugar having arrived in London:—Held: C. S., or the parties in London who represented him, were entitled to the sugar on payment of the bill of lading freight.

Here C. S. & co. [the agent of the charterer] . . . bought goods, intending them for him, but declined to deliver or transfer the possession of them, until they should have been reimbursed the cost price. The question is whether, as between themselves & the shipowner, they had a right to make a bargain that the goods should be carried for less than the charterparty freight. I think they had. They were in the same position as any third party would have been. The possession of the goods by C. S. & co. was, as it were, adverse to H. Vessel to have a lien on cargo for recovery of all such bill of lading freight, dead freight, demurrage, & all other charges whatsoever. Only oats & barley were loaded, & the vessel, which was ordered to a direct port of discharge, had to leave when only about half loaded owing to the charterers' liability to buy any further cargo. By the bills of lading that were signed it was provided that the cargo was "to be delivered . . . unto order, he or they paying freight for the goods & performing all other conditions & exceptions as per charterparty . . . at the rate of freight as per charterparty per ton of 2,240 lbs. gross weight delivered in full, 6*d.* less if ordered to a direct port on signing last bill of lading":—Held: the freight payable by defts. as receivers of the cargo was at the rate of 12*s.* per ton of 2,240 lbs. gross weight delivered.—RED "R." 4883. —— —— Where express stipulation—"Not under chartered rates."]—Payments made in advance on account of freight cannot be recovered back, although the vessel is lost. Pltf. chartered a vessel to defts. for a homeward voyage from Calcutta, with an option to defts. to send the vessel on an intermediate voyage at a freight therein mentioned, "such freight to be paid as follows: £1,200 in rupees to be advanced the master by the freighters' agents at Calcutta against his receipt, & so be deducted, together with 1½ per cent. commission on the amount advanced & cost of insurance from freight on settlement thereof, & the remainder on right delivery of the cargo at port of discharge, in cash as customary." By another clause the master was to "sign bills of lading at any current rate of freight required, without prejudice to the charterparty; but not under chartered rates, except the difference be paid in cash." Defts. elected to send the vessel on the intermediate voyage & paid the £1,200, but induced the master, whom they required to sign bills of lading below the chartered rates, to postpone payment of the difference till the cargo was complete. The difference was not paid, & the vessel was lost on her way out to sea. In an action for the difference:—Held: pltf. was entitled to recover.—BYRNE v. SCHILLER (1871), L. R. 6 Exch. 319; 40 L. 4886. —— Right to freight at charterparty rate.]—By a forward freight contract, contained in a shipping order, C. D. & co. agreed to provide tonnage at 16*s.* 6*d.* a ton for the carriage of 3,000 tons of wheat of pltfs. from Bombay to Liverpool. C. D. & co. declared for the shipment of the wheat a steamer of defts., which had been chartered by M. & co. to carry a cargo from Bombay to Liverpool at a freight of 30*s.* per ton, & half the space of which had been sub-let by M. & co. to C. D. & co. Pltfs. knew that there was a charterparty, but not its terms. After 2,100 tons of the wheat had been loaded, pltfs. tendered to the captain for his signature bills of lading in which the freight was 16*s.* 6*d.* The captain refused to sign the bills of lading unless the difference between 30*s.* & 16*s.* 6*d.* was paid to him, in accordance with the terms of the charterparty. Pltfs. declined to pay this, & demanded the return of their wheat. The captain retained the wheat, & sailed without signing any bills of lading for it. In order to get delivery pltfs. under protest, took bills of lading in which the freight was 30*s.* At the time of the loading the captain had an opportunity of seeing the shipping order, but did not, in fact, do so :—Held : there was no contract by defts. to carry the wheat at 16*s.* 6*d.* ; defts. were not bound to return the wheat to pltfs. ; & pltfs. were not entitled to recover from defts. the excess of freight above 16*s.* 6*d.*—RALLI BROTHERS v. PADDINGTON S.S. 4887. Provision for alternate rates — Time freight.]—(1) A charterparty provided that the ship should sail to any safe island or islands on the south-west coast of Africa, agreeably to instructions which were to be given to the captain in due time by the charterers or their agents, & there load, from the factors of the charterers, a full cargo of guano or other lawful produce, which the charterers bound themselves to provide ; & being so loaded should proceed therewith to a safe port in the United Kingdom, & deliver the same on being paid freight at £3 18*s.* per ton, the freight to be paid on unloading & right delivery of the cargo, one-third in cash on arrival at port of destination, & the remainder by approved acceptances at three months, or cash equal thereto, etc., & it was further agreed, that, in case the charterers' agents should be unable to furnish a cargo of guano at the ports or places therein provided, they should have power to send the vessel to any other safe port or ports, place or places, for the purpose of obtaining a cargo of guano in the manner aforesaid, or of other goods, etc., in which case they were to pay for such service, as hire for the said vessel, after the rate of 15*s.* 6*d.* per ton per month, such pay or hire to commence from the day of the vessel's clearing outwards at the Custom house, London, & to terminate upon the vessel's return to her port of delivery as thereinbefore provided for, & the discharge of the cargo. If the freighters' agents intended so to employ the vessel, they were to give the master written notice of such their intention, on production whereof the freighters engaged to pay the owner, in cash on account, three months' pay for the hire of the vessel, & the balance to be paid on the vessel's return as aforesaid. The charterers instructed their agent on the south-west coast of Africa that the ship should proceed according to his instructions, & that, in case she could not find a cargo, she should proceed where he deemed it likely to procure one. The vessel sailed, pursuant to the charterers' directions, to an island on the south-west coast of Africa, where the agent met her, & informed the captain that there was no guano to be had there, & that she must procure a cargo in Saldanha Bay, another place on the same coast, & must proceed to the Cape for a licence to load a cargo there. The vessel accordingly sailed for the Cape, but, being there required to enter into an engagement to sign & hand over bills of lading for the cargo, as a security for the charges of the licence, the captain refused to do so unless the agent would make the freight payable according to the time employed, instead of according to the weight of the cargo ; & the latter accordingly gave the captain notice that he engaged him upon time, according to the latter clause of the charterparty :—Held : in such circumstances, this clause had come into operation, & the time freight was recoverable.

(2) The vessel, having loaded a cargo of guano at Saldanha Bay, proceeded therewith to England, &, under the charterers' instructions, went to Southampton, to discharge her cargo. The charterers wrote to the captain there, stating that, without prejudice to the charterparty, or any dispute connected with the vessel, their wishes were that it should be landed & warehoused in the Southampton docks in bulk, which was accordingly done :—Held : upon such landing of the cargo the balance of the freight became payable.—FENWICK v. BOYD (1846), 15 M. & W. 632 ; 153 E. The bill of lading stated that the quantity of coal shipped was 1,184 tons. On arrival at Port de Bouc the consignees exercised their option by accepting the cargo at the bill of lading quantity, less 2 per cent., but charged the ship with 1 franc per ton on the bill of lading quantity without deducting the 2 per cent.:—Held: the clauses of the charterparty must be read together, & as the consignees had elected to pay freight on the bill of lading quantity, less 2 per cent., the same deduction of 2 per cent. must be allowed by defts. in respect of the payment of 1 franc per ton by the shipowner for the discharge.—THE HOLLINSIDE, [1898] P. 131; 67 L. 4899. —— When exercisable.]—Pltfs. chartered from defts. a steamer for the carriage of a cargo of coal for delivery abroad. Clause 1 of the charterparty provided that the freight should be at the rate of 150*s.* per ton delivered or on bills of lading quantity, less 2 per cent. in lieu of weighing, at receiver's option, to be declared in writing before bulk was broken. Clause 9 of the printed form of the charterparty was altered by arrangement for the payment of the full amount instead of on a certain proportion of the freight, & a cheque for the full amount calculated upon 8,788 tons, the quantity shown by the bill of lading, was given, & the charterers' agents rendered the shipowners a debit note of £1,318 4*s.* The vessel was lost on the voyage, & the charterers claimed they were entitled to exercise their option & sought to recover the 2 per cent. off the full freight they had paid. Defts. denied that in the circumstances the option could be exercised, & claimed on the true construction of the claim in the charterparty to be entitled to retain the full sum paid on the basis of the bill of lading quantity:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to a repayment of the sum claimed.

It has been argued by applts. that, on the true construction of the printed form, the option could only be exercised by the receiver after the ship had arrived at the port of discharge. I can see no ground for such a contention. Undoubtedly this option was frequently exercised while the vessel was at sea, & it would astonish the shipping community to know they could not exercise the option unless & until the ship had arrived (SCRUTTON, L.J.).—ENGLISH COALING Co., LTD. v. TATEM (W. "Freight payable on deals & sawn lumber on the intake measure of quantity delivered." A bill of lading was signed for a specified number of pieces, deals battens, & scantling, making freight payable "as per charter-party." The various pieces were, in the ordinary course of business, measured by the shipper at the port of shipment & their dimensions entered in a specification; the figures representing such dimensions being, before shipment, chalked on each piece respectively. During the voyage a number of the pieces were lost. The remainder was delivered at the port of destination, but the measurement figures put on some of the pieces delivered had become obliterated. The dimensions of the pieces lost were unknown; but there was some evidence that they were of average size compared with the rest of the cargo:—Held: under the charterparty freight was payable on the measurement figures as ascertained at the port of shipment, & not on the quantity delivered measured at the port of discharge, according to the intake mode of measurement; & that, having regard to the particular circumstances, the amount might be calculated by assuming that the pieces lost were of average size as compared with the remainder, & making a proportionate reduction from the sum total of the measurements in the specification.—SPAIGHT v. FARNWORTH (1880), 5 Q. Freight was payable on the intake measure of quantity delivered as ascertained at port of discharge, less value of cargo short delivered if any. It was also provided by the charter-party that the bill of lading should be conclusive against the owners as establishing the quantity delivered to the ship. The bill of lading described the four classes of timber, of which the cargo consisted as deals, scantlings, deal ends, & boards, specified the number of pieces in, & the measurement in superficial feet of, each class, besides giving the total number of pieces & the measurement of the cargo over all. At the port of discharge it was found that there was a shortage in the number of deals & deal ends, while there was an over-delivery of scantlings & boards:—Held: the bill of lading was conclusive as to the number of pieces in, & the measurement of each class of, timber, & therefore defts. were entitled to damages in respect of the pieces short delivered, & also to deduct from the freight payable by the charter-party an amount proportionate to the freight attributable to the shortage.—MEDITERRANEAN & NEW YORK S.S. 4931. —— Frustration of adventure—Ship detained.]—Defts.' steamer was chartered by pltfs. as from Nov. 30, 1916, for a voyage to New York & back to a French Atlantic port. Hire was to be paid monthly in advance at a fixed monthly rate. The charterparty provided that if the steamer was lost or missing hire paid in advance & not earned should be returned to charterers & that charterers should have a lien on the steamer for all moneys paid in advance & not earned. There was an exceptions clause, which included arrests & restraints of princes, rulers, & peoples. The steamer was to be delivered to the charterers at Gibraltar. On Dec. 2, the steamer was detained at Gibraltar by the British authorities because she was a Greek ship, & she was not released till Feb. 10, 1917. On Dec. 12, the charterers gave notice to the owners that the charterparty was at an end. The charterers in this action claimed a declaration that the charterparty had been avoided; they also claimed to recover the month's hire paid in advance. Deft. counterclaimed for the amount of freight due if the charter was still in existence:—Held: the detention of the ship by the British Govt. amounted to a frustration of the commercial adventure, & the contract was dissolved either on Dec. 2, when the detention began, or on Dec. 12, when the charterers gave notice that the charter was dissolved, but the charterers were not entitled to recover back the hire paid in advance.—

4935. Charterparty providing for advances for ship's disbursements—Master or owner not obliged to accept advances.]—Pltfs.' steamer was, on two occasions, chartered by defts. for the homeward voyage from a Spanish port to Liverpool. The charterparties provided for the payment of certain lump sum freights, & both contained the following clause: "Cash for steamer's ordinary disbursements at port or ports of loading; not exceeding £150 in all, to be advanced at exchange of 50*d.* to the dollar on account of freight subject to 3 per cent. to cover cost of insurance, etc., captain's receipts to be conclusive evidence of the amount of such advances, & of their having been properly made, & balance of freight, on right & true delivery of the cargo, in cash." On the first voyage the master, having part of his outward freight in hand, partly disbursed the vessel therewith, & defts. advanced cash for the balance, amounting at the stipulated rate of exchange to £90 16*s.* 6*d.* On the second voyage the master, having a sufficient balance of his outward freight, fully disbursed the vessel to an amount exceeding £150, & did not obtain any advance freight from defts. Defts. deducted from the freight, due to pltfs. on the delivery of the homeward cargo on the first voyage, the profit they would have made by the difference of exchange on the amount required to make up £150, &, on the second voyage, the profit which they would have made by the difference of exchange on the whole £150 if they had advanced that sum on account of freight at the loading port. In an action by pltfs. against defts. for balance of freight so deducted:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to succeed as the clause was optional, not obligatory, on pltfs., so that if they provided their master with money to disburse the ship, he was not bound to apply to defts. for cash up to the limited amount by way of advance freight.—THE PRIMULA, [1894] P. 128; 63 L. But where the owner, a mtgee., had received payment of freight from the charterer, under protest on the part of the charterer that there was a certain sum to be deducted on account of advances to the captain pursuant to stipulation in the charter, & the owner gave an undertaking to refund such sum as might appear on the charterer's account to be due by reason of such advances, & afterwards to be at liberty to dispute any of the items in the account:—Held: the charterer was entitled to recover the sum, at all events in the first instance, in an action for money had & received, it appearing that the sum had, in fact, been bonâ fide advanced to the captain, leaving the shipowner to raise the question of his liability for such advances in a separate action.—GIBBS v. CHARLETON (1857), 26 L. to be paid £1,000 on sailing, & the remainder on right delivery of the cargo; "say, if the captain should so require, one moiety at each of the ports of discharge": the ship was to be consigned to charterers' agents at port of discharge, paying the usual commission of not exceeding 2 per cent. on amount of freight of £1,650; the stevedore recommended by charterers to be "employed at ship's expense at usual charge." Owing to the fault of the stevedore in stowing the cargo in London, an expense of £78 9*s*. 4*d*. was incurred at San Francisco in getting at the goods for that place. W. & co., defts.' agents at San Francisco, paid this sum, amongst other disbursements, together amounting to more than the freight payable at San Francisco, & claimed to settle it in account with the captain, & threatened to arrest the ship unless he would sign an account between them & pltf., in which the debt due to them for the disbursement in question was brought to the debit of pltf. & the freight to a greater amount than was payable at San Francisco was put to his credit: the captain, owing to this threat, & in order to be at liberty to proceed on the voyage, signed the account under protest:—Held: (1) the £78 9*s*. 4*d*. was a ship's disbursement which pltf. was bound to incur; W. & co. advanced the money as agents for pltf., & therefore he was liable to them for the amount. (2) the captain's signing the account between W. & co. & pltf. did not operate as a payment by defts. to pltf. of the balance of the freight.—ROBERTS v. SHAW (1863), 4 B. & S. 44; 2 New Rep. 237; 32 L. The vessel stranded at the entrance to the latter harbour, & was abandoned by defts. to pltfs. as a constructive total loss, but the cargo of timber was subsequently delivered. At Pensacola the sum of £1,677 19*s*. 10*d*. had been advanced to the master by the charterers, under a clause in the charterparty, by which "Sufficient cash for ship's ordinary disbursements at port of loading to be advanced the master by the charterers or their agents at the (agreed) exchange, ship paying 2½ per cent. commission, including insurance. Master to give his draft, on owners or consignees, as required & customary to cover same, which shall be paid out of the first freight collected." Defts. accepted from the consignees of the cargo, who held the master's draft for value, the freight less the above sum; but pltfs. claimed the gross freight as a benefit incident to the ship:—Held: defts., in accounting to pltfs. for the freight, were entitled to deduct the sum of £1,677 19*s*. 10*d*. as, by the terms of the charterparty, the cash advanced at Pensacola was equivalent to prepaid freight, &, as such, did not pass to pltfs. on the abandonment of the vessel & subsequent delivery of the cargo.—THE RED SEA, [1896] P. 20; 65 L. 4946. Difference between chartered freight & bill of lading freight—Lower rate payable in advance.]—A charterparty stipulated that the ship should load a cargo of coal at Cardiff & proceed to Pernambuco & there deliver the same, & afterwards receive a full cargo of sugar & other merchandise, & therewith proceed to a safe port in the United Kingdom, & deliver the same on being paid freight, at the rate of 60*s*. per ton, of 20 cwt. nett for sugar, & for other produce at a rate proportionate thereto, being in full for the round.

"The freight to be paid in the following manner: £150, on signing bills of lading at Cardiff, cash for disbursements abroad at the current rate of exchange, & the remainder on the delivery of the cargo. The master to sign bills for each cargo at any rate of freight that might be tendered. The owners to have a lien on the homeward cargo for all freight & demurrage that might accrue thereon, to the extent of the bill of lading freight, but the difference, if any, to be paid at the port of loading by captain's draft on charterers, at usance, which they agreed to accept & pay on consignee at loading port agreeing amount":—Held: the two clauses were not inconsistent, their meaning being that if the bill of lading freight was less than the charter freight, the difference was to be paid at the port of loading by the captain's draft on the charterers, at usance, if the consignee settled the amount, otherwise at the port of delivery.—SANTOS v. BRICE (1861), 6 H. & N. 290; 30 L. SUB-SECT. 3.—LOSS OF CARGO.

4948. Right to advance freight.]—By charterparty between deft., owner of a ship, & pltf., it was agreed that the ship should proceed from London to B., & there load a cargo from pltf.'s factors, & therewith proceed to London, & deliver the same, on being paid freight at a specified rate: "cash, for ship's disbursements, to be advanced to the extent of £300, free of interest, but subject to insurance": "the freight to be paid, on unloading & right deliver of the cargo, as follows: say, in cash, less two months' interest at" etc., "& if required, £300 to be paid in cash on arrival, less two months' interest." £300 was advanced by pltf.'s agents at B. for ship's disbursements. Neither pltf. nor defts. insured in respect of this £300. The ship left B. with a cargo for London, but was lost before reaching London. Pltf. claimed the payment of the £300, as a loan made to defts.; defts. tendered the amount at which the £300 might have been insured, but refused to pay more:—Held: pltf.'s claim could not be supported, as it appeared from the charterparty that the advance was not a loan, but was an advance of freight.

The only question is whether this was a mere loan or an advance of freight. . . . If it is to be insured, it must be for freight in advance; for a mere loan could not be insured (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.).—HICKS v. SHIELD (1857), 7 E. & B. 633; 26 L. J. Q. B. 205; 29 L. T. O. It was further stipulated, that if the vessel should be lost or captured, the freight by time should be payable up to the period when she should be so lost or captured, or last heard of:—Held: under the former clauses of this agreement, the freighter could not claim a return of any part of the four months' advance, on the vessel being lost within that period; but the advance, being in respect of freight, was absolute, & the stipulation on this head was not qualified by the subsequent clause.—SAUNDERS v. DREW (1832), 3 B. & Ad. 445; 110 E. " one-third freight, if required, to be advanced, less 3 per cent. for interest & insurance." Shortly after the commencement of the voyage the vessel was wrecked & the cargo lost. Subsequently to the loss, & not before, the shipowner required payment of advance freight under the above clause : —Held : the requirement by the shipowner was a condition precedent to the liability of the charterer to pay advance freight ; the requirement was made too late, & the charterer was not liable. —SMITH, HILL & Co. v. PYMAN, BELL & Co., [1891] 1 Q. Bills of lading were to be signed within twenty four hours after the cargo was on board. After the commencement of the voyage & before bills of lading were signed the vessel sank & the cargo was lost. The charterers thereupon refused to present the bills of lading for signature & the shipowner sued them for breach of the charterparty in so refusing :—Held : the loss of the cargo did not relieve the charterers from their liability to present bills of lading, & the shipowner was entitled to recover damages equal to the amount of the advance freight.—ORIENTAL S.S. 4964. —— Freight payable three days after sailing—Destruction of part of cargo before sailing —Excepted perils.]—By a contract of charterparty defts. contracted to load on board pltfs.' ship a full & complete cargo at a certain rate of freight per ton " on the quantity to be delivered to the consignees." " The freight to be due & paid as follows, two-thirds in cash three days after sailing, ship lost or not lost, the balance on unloading & right delivery of the cargo." After defts. had loaded a part of the cargo a fire broke out on board & destroyed the goods so loaded. Fire was one of the perils mutually excepted by the charterparty. Defts. subsequently loaded the balance of the cargo, & the ship sailed. Three days after sailing pltfs. claimed payment of advance freight on two-thirds of the full cargo shipped :—Held : pltfs. were not entitled to payment of advance freight on the part of the cargo destroyed.—WEIR & Co. v. GIRVIN & Co., [1900] 1 Q. On the ship's arrival, pltfs.' brokers sent the cotton to a wharf with a copy of the bills of lading, another copy of the bills of lading being forwarded to pltfs. According to the ordinary practice, the wharfinger, on receiving the cotton, measured it, & sent a note of the measurement to defts., who were the ship's brokers, one of them also being the owner. Defts. as brokers made out a freight note, adopting the measurement from the wharfinger's note, which in consequence of the swelling of the bales on the voyage was considerably more than the Madras measurement in the margin of the bills of lading. The vessel was claimed by a British subject. Pending the suit in the Admlty., A. brought assumpsit against B. for the passage money, with a quantum meruit pro rata itineris:—Held: pltf. could not recover; at least, not until the Ct. of Admlty. had decided on the question of prize. Pltf. was therefore nonsuited. Semble: passage money is the same as freight.—MULLOY v. BACKER (1804), 5 East, 316; 1 Smith, K. B. 447; 102 E. R. 1091.

The hulk belonged to a third party, & A. had only acquired a right to use it for the purpose of embarking passengers on his steamer. In an action by B. against A. for the injury he sustained:—Held: (1) A. was answerable for all injury occurring through the means of transit being improper, whether it arose from the negligence of his own servants or of other parties who helped to provide the means of transit; (2) A. having invited B. on the hulk, was bound to protect him from concealed dangers, & was liable for injury he sustained through the condition of the hatchway, even though it was under the care of others & not his own servants.—JOHN v. BACON (1870), L. 4985. —— —— "However caused"—Loss of life on sea portion of journey.]—A free pass, obtained by an official of another railway co., for himself & wife, from the London & South Western Ry. co., for the journey from London to Jersey, referred, on the face of it, to the following condition printed on the back: "That it shall be taken as evidence of an agreement that the co. are relieved from all responsibility for any injury, delay, loss, or damage, however caused, that may be sustained by the person or persons using this pass." Through the negligence of the servants of the railway co., & during the transit from Southampton to the Channel Islands, the steamer stranded, & the official was drowned. His own & his wife's luggage were also lost. The widow on behalf of herself & infant children claimed, against the fund paid by the railway co. into ct. in a limitation suit, for the loss of her husband & father of the children:—Held: (1) in respect of the loss of life, as the widow & children could only claim under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), where, if death had not ensued, the party injured would have been entitled to maintain an action for damages, the conditions on which the free pass was granted, & which the deceased must, from his official position, be taken to have known, included the sea passage as well as the land transit & barred the claim; (2) in respect of the claim by the widow, as administratrix of her husband, for the loss of his personal effects, & in her own right, for the loss of her luggage, the condition attaching to the pass equally precluded any claim, for the London & South Western Ry. special Act of 1848, under ss. 47, 48, 49 of which, made perpetual by an Act of 1860, the co. is empowered to maintain steamers is not controlled by Railways Clauses Act, 1863 (c. 92), s. 31, extending to steamers Railway & Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (c. 31), s. 7; (3) the words "or other things whatsoever on board the ship" in 1894 Act, s. 503 (1) (b), include passengers' luggage.—THE STELLA, [1900] P. 161; 69 L. The contract contained a clause that the shipowners should not be liable for loss, damage or delay to a passenger or his baggage arising from the act of God, or from causes of any kind beyond the carrier's control, even though the loss, damage or delay might have been caused by the neglect or default of the shipowners' servants. It was further provided that all questions arising under the clause should be decided according to English law. A subsequent clause provided that no claim under the contract should be enforceable against the shipowners unless a written notice thereof was delivered to them within three days after the passenger should be landed from the steamer at the termination of her voyage. (wind & weather permitting) for which written guarantees will be given." Then followed a list of ships, amongst which the Asiatic was named as to sail from London on Aug. 15, & from Plymouth Aug. 25. In another part of the circular it was stated: "Passengers from Ireland can readily join at Plymouth. A deposit of one-half the passage money to be paid at the time the berths are engaged, the balance to be paid prior to granting the embarkation order." Pltf. engaged a berth on board the Asiatic, & paid defts. £32 10*s.* as a deposit, but no written guarantee was given. The Asiatic did not arrive at Plymouth until Sept. 3, although not prevented by wind or weather. Pltf.'s berth was kept vacant from London to Plymouth:—Held: the statement in the circular was not a mere representation, but a warranty that the Asiatic would sail on the days appointed, & as she did not, pltf. was justified in taking a passage on board another vessel, & was entitled to recover from defts. the amount of the deposit, & the expenses he had been put to by the delay at Plymouth.

Where parties by advertisement hold out that they are ready to give a written guarantee that a vessel shall sail on a particular day, & a contract is entered into specifically on that footing, in substance that is a warranty to sail on the day named (POLLOCK, C.B.).

It seems to me that, in this case, time was of the essence of the contract; that the contract was broken by defts., &, being broken, that pltf. had the option of rescinding it by entering another vessel, & therefore entitled to recover back his money (ALDERSON, B.).—CRANSTON v. MARSHALL (1850), 5 Exch. 395; 19 L. You may give evidence, that the captain had often expressed his conviction, that the officer to whom he gave charge of the ship was incompetent for that situation. You may call experienced nautical men, & ask them, whether in their judgment, particular facts, which have been proved, amount to gross negligence. —MALTON v. NESBIT (1824), 1 C. & P. 70; 171 E. 5004. Extent of captain's powers—Absolute control—To ensure safe & proper conduct of vessel—Exercise of powers limited to necessity of case.]—The captain of a ship has absolute control over the passengers in all that is necessary to the safe & proper conduct of the vessel, but the exercise of such power in each instance is defined & limited by the necessity of the case.

The contract with the passenger is to carry, board & lodge him, & the passenger is to obey all the captain's reasonable orders, in an emergency even to work the ship when necessary. If a passenger misconduct himself at table, the captain may remove him, or may even imprison him for a short period, if imprisonment be necessary for the enforcement of his lawful commands. The rule of law is simple; the power of the captain is limited to the necessity of the case. . . . He

5005. —— Power to order passengers to work ship—When necessary.]—KING v. FRANKLIN, No. 5004, ante.

5006. —— Exclusion of passenger from table—What conduct justifies.]—Conduct unbecoming a gentleman, in the strict sense of the word, will, it seems, justify a captain of a ship in excluding a passenger from the cuddy table whom he has engaged by contract to provide for there; but it is difficult to say in what degree want of polish would, in point of law, warrant such exclusion: but it is clear that if a passenger use threats of personal violence towards the captain, the captain may exclude him from the table, & require him to take his meals in his own private apartment.

If the husband be excluded from the cuddy table, & the wife, not from compulsion, but from a wish to be with her husband, take her meals with him in private, this will not amount to a breach of contract on the part of the captain so far as regards the wife.—PRENDERGAST v. COMPTON (1837), 8 C. & P. 454; 7 L. Deft. [the captain] is not responsible for any deficiencies in the provisions or stores, which vested with the ship brokers, or agents, or owners of the ship (CHANNELL, B.).—ALDWORTH v. STEWART (1866), 4 F. & F. 957; 14 L. T. 862; 2 Mar. L. C. 383, N. P.

5009. —— Putting on shore—Passenger of bad character—No impropriety on board.]—A declaration in assumpsit on an agreement to carry pltf. in a ship to a particular place, alleged as a breach, that defts., by their agent, caused him to be disembarked at an intermediate point, &, by their agent, caused the disembarkation to be conducted in a scandalous, disgraceful, & improper manner, whereby, & also by contemptuous usage & insulting language addressed to pltf. by the agent in effecting said disembarkation, pltf. sustained damage:—Held: (1) the declaration was good on motion in arrest of judgment; (2) that the judge at Nisi Prius had rightly received evidence of the language of the captain of defts.' ship in putting pltf. on shore, in which he described pltf. as being a pickpocket, & belonging to the swell mob; (3) the judge had rightly directed the jury that defts. were responsible for any injury naturally resulting from the acts of the captain, when acting as their servant, & pltf. was entitled to fair compensation for the injury done to him in being put on shore at the intermediate place, so far as injury arose from the act of the captain in putting him on shore. Semble: supposing pltf. had been a pickpocket, or belonged to the swell mob, it would be no excuse for turning him out of a ship in which he had paid his passage, so long as he was not guilty of any impropriety on board.—COPPIN v. BRAITHWAITE (1844), 7 L. 5010. —— Forcible coercion—Passenger fighting mate.]—In trespass, the count alleging that deft., on, etc., assaulted, beat & ill-treated pltf., & then knocked him down on the deck of a ship, deft. pleaded, as to the assaulting, beating & ill-treating, that deft. was captain of a vessel conveying passengers, of whom pltf. was one; that pltf. made a noise, disturbance & affray on board the vessel, & "was then fighting with a certain other person then also being a passenger," "& whose name is to deft. unknown" & was striving to beat such person, & also deft., so being the captain, etc., whereupon deft. so being the captain, etc., for the preservation of the peace, & of order & discipline on the vessel, & to separate pltf. & the other person, & to prevent pltf. from beating the person & deft., as he otherwise would have done, molliter manus, etc. It appeared on the trial that the person with whom pltf. had been fighting was not unknown by name, & was not a passenger, but the mate of the vessel:—Held: the justification was sufficiently maintained notwithstanding the variance, the name & description of the party not being material. But pltf. must recover for the knocking down, that being alleged as a distinct trespass from the assaulting, beating & ill-treating, & not covered by the justification.—NODEN v. JOHNSON (1850), 16 Q. accommodations for passengers in a ship, there was a stipulation, that, if it should be necessary for the convenience, & at the request, of the hirer, to put into an intermediate port for stock or otherwise, he, the hirer, would pay all port & necessary charges consequent thereon:—Held: this raised an implied covenant, on the part of the captain who let the cabins, etc., to put into any such port, if required.

(2) There was also a covenant on the part of the latter, to permit & suffer the hirer to stow away the baggage of the passengers in a part of the hold:—Held: this fairly imported that there should be some demand or request made by the hirer for the clearing of the space agreed on.

71, a sailing ship is not a passenger ship because she carries more than thirty passengers, or more than one statute adult passenger to every fifty tons, if that number or proportion is not made up without reckoning cabin passengers; &, where persons are cabin passengers in all respects except that of having received contract tickets in the form in 18 & 19 Vict. c. 119, sched. K., which in its terms applies to passenger ships only, such persons, for the purpose of estimating the number or proportion, are to be reckoned as cabin passengers; & unless, without including them, the number or proportion is not made up, the ship is not a passenger ship.—ELLIS v. PEARCE (1858), E. 5033. —— Passage money not charged—Friends of master.]—On her voyage from Mediterranean ports to Aarhuus, in Denmark, the Chelona, laden with barley, put into Malta for bunker coals. The master there took three persons on board who desired to go to England. He charged them no passage money, but made a substantial charge per head for their food, for which he did not account to the owners. The Chelona touched at Portland for bunker coals, & the three persons were there landed. The collector for the general lighthouse authority at Portland demanded light dues, which he alleged had been incurred by the owners of the ship in consequence of such landing:—Held: the ship was exempt from light dues; the case was analogous to that of the master taking a friend on board & landing him & did not fall within the proviso to the exemption in the Order in Council of May 16, 1893.—HAY v. TRINITY HOUSE CORPN. 5034. —— Gratuitous pleasure trip—Workmen's excursion.]—Resps. were charged that they, being the owners of the British steamship Era, did ply on the river O. with certain passengers on board without having one of the duplicates of a certificate issued by the Board of Trade put up in some conspicuous part of the ship so as to be visible to all persons on board same. More than twelve persons were taken on board the steamer for an excursion from I. down the river O. to F. & back. No charge was made by resps. for the use of the steamer, but a gratuity was given to the master & crew:—Held: the steamship was not a passenger steamship within the meaning of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 303, 318.—HEDGES v. HOOKER (1889), 60 L. 5035. —— "Vessel used in navigation"—Electric launch used on artificial lake—Fitted to carry passengers.]—A small electric launch on an artificial lake fitted to carry passengers:—Held: not to be a vessel used in navigation within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 2, now 1894 Act, s. 742, & therefore not to be a passenger steamer within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 318, now 1894 Act, s. 281, so as to require a duplicate of her Board of Trade certificate "to be put up in some conspicuous part of the ship."

A launch was used for the purpose of carrying passengers on pleasure trips round an artificial lake half a mile long by 180 yards wide, without having any duplicate of a Board of Trade certificate put up in her:—Held: the launch, while so used on a sheet of water of that size, was not a vessel used in navigation, &, therefore, not a passenger steamer within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 318.—SOUTHPORT CORPN. v. MORRISS, [1893] 1 Q. Along the same water seagoing vessels were taken to points beyond the lock gates:—Held: as the launch was used in waters upon which, in ordinary parlance, navigation could reasonably be said to take place, it was a "vessel used in navigation" & a "ship" within 1894 Act, s. 742, & therefore was subject to the provisions requiring a certificate under 1894 Act, s. 271 (1) (b).—WEEKS v. ROSS, [1913] 2 K. e. ——.]—A steamer carrying passengers, which sails from & returns to the same place in the United Kingdom, is a "passenger steamer" "carrying passengers to, from, or between any places in the United Kingdom," within Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 267; &, if she carries more than twelve passengers without having obtained the necessary certificate, her master or owner is liable to a fine for every passenger so carried, as being a passenger "carried from or to any place in the United Kingdom," within Merchant Shipping Act, 1906, s. 21.—YEUDALL v. SWEENEY, YEUDALL v. LYNN, [1922] S. f. "Carries."]—The word "carries" in Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 271 (1), does not mean "is fitted to carry" but "in fact carries"; & a complaint which merely sets forth that a passenger steamer, for which no certificate has been obtained, has, on a specified occasion, carried more than twelve passengers, the number being stated, is relevant.—YEUDALL v.

time—In named ship.]—(1) By 1894 Act, s. 341, a "passage broker" is defined as "any person who sells or lets, or agrees to sell or let, or is anywise concerned in the sale or letting of steerage passages in any ship proceeding from the British Islands to any place out of Europe not within the Mediterranean Sea"; & by sect. 342, "a person shall not act directly or indirectly as a passage broker" unless he holds the prescribed licence:—Held: the selling or letting intended by sect. 341 was a selling or letting in a named ship of a passage to commence at a definite time for a specified voyage, &, therefore, a person who agreed to procure a passage for another, no ship or time of sailing being named or specified, had not "acted as a passage broker" within sect. 342.

(2) Resp., on consideration of £22 paid by him to C., agreed to place C.'s son as a farm pupil in Canada, & out of the £22 to procure him a steamship passage from Liverpool to Quebec. Subsequently resp. obtained for about £9 from shipowners a contract ticket for a voyage from Liverpool to Quebec, & sent it to the son. Resp. made no profit or commission out of the latter transaction:—Held: he had not been "concerned in the sale or letting of a passage" within sect. 341.

(3) By sect. 320, "if any person, except the Board of Trade & persons acting for them & under their direct authority, receives money from any person for or in respect of" a passage by ship of one of the specified kinds, "he shall give to the person paying the same a contract ticket signed by or on behalf of the owner, master, or charterer of the ship":—Held: in order to bring a case within this sect. there must be a receipt of money paid for a specified passage, commencing at a fixed time in a named ship.—MORRIS v. HOWDEN, [1897] 1 Q. 5038. —— Form of—Clause not approved by Board of Trade—Limitation of liability.]—The form approved by the Board of Trade under 1894 Act, s. 320 (2), contained a "direction" that "a contract ticket shall not contain on the face thereof any condition, stipulation, or exception not contained in this form." The contract ticket issued by defts. for a passage for a steerage passenger in their steamship from the United Kingdom to New York contained all that was in the approved form, but in addition it contained on the front thereof the words "See back," & on the back thereof there were a number of conditions which had not been approved by the Board of Trade, one of which exempted defts. from loss, damage or delay to the passenger or his luggage arising from (inter alia), the negligence of the shipowner's servants. During the voyage the steamship, owing to the negligence of defts.' servants, collided with an iceberg & sank, & the passenger was drowned:—Held: the above condition, not having been approved by the Board of Trade, was invalid, & therefore defts. were not entitled by reason of 1894 Act, s. 320 (2), to rely upon it to protect themselves from liability.—RYAN v. OCEANIC STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD., O'CONNELL v. SAME, SCANLON v. SAME, O'BRIEN v. SAME, [1914] 3 K. The ship was lost by perils of the sea: the passengers were saved in a British colony, not being their place of destination; the master within six weeks forwarded them to their place of destination:—Held: the expenses so incurred were charges to which the owner was subject under Passenger Act, 1852 (c. 44), ss. 49, 50, & might be recovered under the policy. Passenger Act, 1852 (c. 44), s. 49, does not merely provide that if the master does not forward the passengers within six weeks the governor may do so, but makes it the duty of the master to forward them.—GIBSON v. BRADFORD (1855), 4 E. & B. 586; 3 C. passage money of a specified amount plus 50 per cent. to Australia & New Zealand "against Passenger Act, 1852 (c. 44) . . . to cover any disbursements that may be made by the assured arising from accident or loss on account of passengers for conveyance to intended destination." The ship after starting on the voyage with a number of emigrant passengers on board who had paid the passage money referred to in the policy, met with an accident, & in consequence the passengers were transferred to other ships, in accordance with the provisions of 1894 Act, in which they were conveyed at pltfs.' expense to their destination. Pltfs.' ship was repaired & subsequently proceeded on the voyage with a fresh lot of passengers on board. Pltfs. claimed to recover as a loss under the policy the money paid by them for the conveyance of the passengers on the other ships:—Held: the policy was an insurance of disbursements which might be made in respect of the passengers whose passage money was referred to in the policy; the passage money paid by the second lot of passengers could not be treated as salvage; & pltfs. were entitled to recover the sum claimed as a loss under the policy.—NEW ZEALAND SHIPPING CO., LTD. v. DUKE, [1914] 2 K. 5044. —— —— Expenses of maintaining passengers during repairs.]—A policy of insurance was made at & from Liverpool to Boston on passage money valued at £700. The policy was in the usual printed form, with this memorandum: "On passage money of emigrants, subject to pay a loss pro rata, & subject to the clauses & conditions made under Passenger Act, 1852 (c. 44), ss. 47–51, compensation clause excepted, & against these risks only." The ship, being a passenger ship within the Act, sailed, & by a peril of the sea was driven into F., a foreign port, where she necessarily remained repairing damages for more than six weeks, after which she proceeded with the passengers to Boston & arrived there. During the detention at F. the passengers were maintained by the insured at a cost exceeding the passage money:—Held: this was not a loss incurred under the enumerated sects., & the underwriters were not liable to make it good.—WILLIS v. COOKE (1855), 5 E. & B. 641; 25 L. The ship struck on a bank about sixty miles from her port of discharge on the voyage insured; & the captain incurred a large expense in hiring steamers, into which after vain endeavours to haul the vessel off the bank, he transferred her passengers, who were taken on board such steamers to their destination:—Held: assuming the expense was within the policy, in estimating it such part of the expenditure as had reference to the attempts to get the vessel off so that she might prosecute her voyage, ought not to be taken into account, but only so much of the hire of the steamers as was paid for the carrying the passengers to the place where the voyage ought to have terminated.

During the service the master of the tug discovered the fact of such previous damage, repudiated the agreement, & brought a suit for salvage:—Held: (1) additional salvage cannot be engrafted on an agreement for extraordinary though it may upon one for ordinary towage; (2) the mere concealment of a fact which might operate on the service & therefore on the agreement, vitiates it; (3) in this case the facts concealed might operate on the service by rendering

SECT. 2.—RELATION BETWEEN TUG AND TOW.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

5049. Tow controls tug.]—THE KINGSTON-BY-SEA, No. 5985, post.

5050. ——.]—THE EMPEROR (1849), 5 L. T. 525.

5051. ——.]—A steam tug towing a sailing ship directs the course of both vessels so long as no directions are given by the person in charge of the ship in tow. The steam tug is the moving power, but it is under the control of the master or pilot on board the ship in tow.

Where a ship in tow of a steam tug, & in charge of a licenced pilot who has the control over & directs the course of both vessels, is navigating a river in a fog so dense that the banks of the river cannot be seen, & those on board the tug & ship in tow do not know in what direction they are going, it is negligence on the part of both vessels to proceed; but as it is the duty of the pilot in charge to give orders to the tug to stop so as to enable the ship in tow to come to an anchor, the neglect on the part of the pilot to give such orders is contributory negligence, which will preclude the owners of the sailing ship from recovering against the owner of the steam tug in an action for negligently running the sailing ship ashore by proceeding during the fog.—SMITH v. ST. LAWRENCE TOW-BOAT CO. (1873), L. R. 5 P. C. 308; 28 L. T. 885; 21 W. R. 569; 2 Asp. M. L. C. 41, P. C.

5052. ——.]—(1) A tug agreed to tow a ship from Liverpool to the Skerries for a fixed sum. The tug imprudently towed the ship in bad weather too near a lee shore, &, the weather becoming worse during the performance of the agreed towage service, the hawser parted, & the ship was placed in a position of danger, & was compelled to let go her anchors to avoid being driven on shore. From this position she was rescued by the tug, having been compelled to slip her anchors & chains, which were lost:—Held: the tug was not entitled to claim salvage remuneration, & her owners were liable to pay for the loss of the anchors & chains.

(2) Semble: if a tug receives positive directions from the ship she is towing as to the course she is to steer, she is bound to obey them; & if the ship gets into danger in consequence of such directions the tug is not liable.

(3) Where the tug is familiar with the navigation & the tow a foreigner, it is the duty of the tug to tow in a safe direction, without waiting for directions from the vessel in tow.—THE ROBERT DIXON (1879), 5 P. D. 54; 42 L. T. 344; 28 W. R. 716; 4 Asp. M. L. C. 246, C. A.

5053. ——.]—A tug with a vessel in tow came into collision with another vessel, which was seriously injured by the tug, but not injured by the vessel in tow. The collision might have been avoided had there been a good look-out on the vessel in tow, & had she warned the tug that the latter was in danger of collision by continuing on her course:—Held: the owners of the vessel in tow were liable.

Under an ordinary contract of towage, the vessel in tow has control over the tug, & is therefore liable for the wrongful acts of the latter, unless they are done so suddenly as to prevent the vessel in tow from controlling them.—THE NIOBE (1888), 13 P. SUB-SECT. 2.—IMPLIED WARRANTY OF FITNESS.

5055. Whether warranty implied in contract of towage.]—Whilst defts.' tug was towing pltfs.' vessel from Birkenhead to the Canada Dock, Liverpool, the towing gear of the tug carried away, with the result that pltfs.' vessel fell against the pierhead at the entrance to the dock & sustained damage.

In an action for breach of the contract of towage, defts. relied on a condition in the contract by which they were "not to be responsible for any damage to the ship they have contracted to tow arising from any perils or accidents of the seas rivers or navigation collision straining or arising from towing gear, including consequence of defect therein or damage thereto, & whether the perils or things above-mentioned or the loss or injury therefrom be occasioned by the negligence default or error in judgment of the pilot master officers engineers crew or other servants of the tug owners":—Held: defts. were liable, whether there was a warranty of fitness implied in the contract of towage, as the President in the ct. below had found, or whether the duty of deft. tug owners was restricted to the supply of a tug as reasonably fit for service as care & skill could make it, for the cause of the damage sustained by pltfs.' vessel was the defective condition of the rivets attaching the towing gear of the tug to her bunker casing. This defect was not covered by the contract, the conditions of which only applied to circumstances occurring after the commencement of, & during, the towage, & not to the state of things existing before the towage began; the words "towing gear" did not include rivets, or attachments, between the gear & the bulkhead, &, therefore, the defect which caused the accident was not within the words of the condition.—THE WEST COCK, [1911] P. 208; 80 L. J. P. 97; 104 L. T. 736; 27 T. L. R. 301; 55 Sol. Jo. 329; 12 Asp. M. L. C. 57, C. A.

5056. As to equipment—Must be in condition reasonable under the circumstances.]—(1) A contract to tow is not a warranty to tow to destination, but an engagement to use best endeavours & competent skill for that purpose, with a vessel properly equipped.

(2) If performance of the stipulated service is rendered impossible by a vis major, the obligation is terminated.

(3) If unforeseen danger unavoidable by the steam tug supervenes to the ship in tow, as by breaking of the hawser, the steam tug is bound to complete the service, if still possible; & the steam tug, if thereby incurring risk & performing duties not within the scope of the original engagement, is entitled to salvage reward.

(4) The conversion of towage into salvage depends on the circumstances of each case.

(5) A tug under contract to tow, by misconduct or negligence, or want of reasonable equipments, occasioning or materially contributing to occasion danger to the ship in tow, is not entitled to salvage reward for rescuing the ship from such danger.

(6) A steam tug engaged in towing or performing salvage services is generally bound to follow the directions of the pilot in charge of the ship.

(7) Under a simple traverse of salvage services, wilful misconduct of salvors cannot, but negligence may, be proved.—THE MINNEHAHA (1861), 1 Lush. 335; 167 E. 5057. ——— ———.]—Tug owners contracted with the agents of the owners of a large French sailing ship to provide a tug to tow her from Falmouth to London. After passing the Prince's Channel lightship, a strong south-westerly wind was encountered, & tug & tow drifted to leeward, the tow taking the ground on the West Shingles Sand. There she remained for several days, during which time the tug engaged to tow, & three other tugs belonging to the same owners, besides other tugs, lifeboats, & a number of boatmen, came to her assistance, & on the fourth day the vessel came off.

In consolidated actions of salvage, the claims of the owners of the tug engaged to tow, & of the three other tugs belonging to them, & also those of the masters & crews of the respective tugs, were separately considered. Some were allowed & some were disallowed. Other claims for "engaged" services in the nature of salvage were also allowed, although the services did not result in the ultimate salving of the vessel. As to the various claims:—Held: the claims of the owners, master, & crew of the tug towing under the contract must be rejected as her owners had failed to prove, the burden of proof being upon them, that they had supplied a tug efficient for the purpose, or that the change from towage to salvage became necessary by reason of special circumstances in the nature of vis major or inevitable accident, & not by reason of the inefficiency of the tug, or want of skill & care on the part of the master & crew.

The contract was for the towage of the Maréchal Suchet by a tug to be supplied by pltfs. This being so, the owners of the tug must be taken to have contracted that the tug should be efficient, & that her crew, tackle & equipment should be equal to the work to be accomplished in weather & circumstances reasonably to be expected; & that reasonable skill care & energy & diligence should be exercised in the accomplishment of the work. On the other hand, they did not warrant that the work should be done under all circumstances & at all hazards, & the failure to accomplish it would be excused if it were due to vis

5058. —— Sufficient supply of coal.]—(1) In a towage contract there is an implied undertaking on the part of the tug owners to supply an efficient tug with sufficient equipments, including a proper supply of coal; & hence, a term in the contract by which the tug owners are exempted from liability for loss or damage occasioned by the negligence of their servants is no defence to an action for damages occasioned to the owners of the tow in consequence of the towage being discontinued owing to the tug having started with an insufficient supply of coals.

(2) Where in the course of towage the tug, owing to her having started with an insufficient supply of coal, is obliged to cast off to go to the nearest port to ship more coal, & then returns & completes the towage, the tug owners are entitled to be paid the price agreed upon in the towage contract if the owners of the tow do not prove any damage to gave been occasioned to them by the temporary discontinuance of the towage.—THE UNDAUNTED (1886), 11 P. Resps. asserted that the contract covered barges only & not scows, & alternatively that if they were responsible their liability was limited to $38.92 per ton of their tonnage:—Held: the Whalen was liable for damages to the statutory limit of $38.92 per ton.

5074. —— Contract performed—After abandonment of way originally contemplated.]—Pltfs. contracted to tow defts.' steamship R. from L'Orient to Liverpool for £400, "no cure, no pay, no salvage." The contract contained the following terms:—During the towage service the master & crew of the tugboat become the servants of the owners of the vessel in tow, & are under the control of the master or person in charge of the vessel in tow, the company only providing the motive power. The co. will not be liable for any damage or loss to or occasioned by the vessel in tow . . . or any damage or loss to any person or property whatsoever, although such damage or loss may be caused or contributed to by the acts or defaults of the master or crew of the tugboat, or by any defect in or breakdown of or accident to the . . . equipment or towing gear of the tugboat." It was also provided that pltfs. should supply a towing hawser sufficient for the purpose, & that the R. should have steam available if possible for steering & anchor use. In fact the R. did not raise steam until after the events in question. In bad weather off the Lizard the hawser, which was good & sufficient, parted, but instead of standing by the R. the tug went into Falmouth to try to get a new rope. In Falmouth her master asked the master of the tug D. to go out & see if the R. wanted assistance, & the D. proceeded out. She found the R., but her services were declined, as the master of the D. refused to make any agreement. Eventually, however, the R. had to take take the services of a steam trawler, & paid her £2,000 to tow her into Plymouth, where pltfs. picked her up & resumed the towage to Liverpool. Pltfs. claimed the £400. Defts. counterclaimed for the £2,000 subject to a deduction of £350 on the basis of a quantum meruit for the towage:—Held: (1) whether regarded as a performance of the contract or on the basis of a quantum meruit pltfs. were entitled to the £400; (2) the tug master ought to have stood by the R., & having improperly left her the tug owners were not protected under the terms of the contract, which covered defaults during the performance of the duties of the contract, but did not apply to a case where the tug master had given up trying to perform the contract in the way in which it was contemplated by the parties that it should be performed.—THE REFRIGERANT, [1925] P. 130; 95 L. Pltfs. paid the £350, & deft. then proceeded, but had to abandon the voyage as the tug was in fact incapable of performing it. Both parties believed at the time the contract was entered into that it was capable of performance, that is, that the tug was of sufficient strength & power to perform the voyage:—Held: there was no contract, the £350 had been paid under a mistake of fact, & consequently pltfs. were entitled to recover it back.—THE SALVADOR (1909), 26 T. 5087. To obey pilot of tow.]—(1) Where a vessel, the last of three vessels in tow of a steamer, the vessel towed being in charge of a duly licenced pilot, came in contact with & damaged another vessel riding at single anchor in the river Clyde, in the deep channel, the Trinity Masters being of opinion that there was plenty of room for the three vessels to pass the vessel at anchor, & that this vessel had not her anchor improperly laid:—Held: although the vessel towed was to blame, the collision being attributable to the swinging of the string of vessels out of the straight line, which was owing to the improper steering of the last vessel, this was the fault of the pilot alone & the owners were exonerated.

A ship in charge of a pilot, & also in tow, is to be considered, primâ facie at least, still in the charge of that pilot, under ordinary circumstances. If the course pursued by the steam tug is in conformity with the directions of the pilot, or not against his directions, & a collision takes place, the pilot is responsible, & not the owners, or the steam tug, which ought to obey the pilot. If, however, the steamer disregarded the directions of the pilot, then the owners of the ship would be responsible, as for the acts of their servant, & the owners of the steam tug might be responsible over to them in another form of action (DR. LUSHINGTON).

(2) The vessel . . . was lying at anchor . . . if under these circumstances any other vessel runs against such a vessel, & does her damage, the burden of proof lies on the vessel doing the damage to exonerate herself, by showing that it was not her fault, & for this obvious & plain reason, a vessel at anchor cannot take measures to prevent a collision (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE GIPSEY KING (1847), 2 Wm. Rob. 537; 5 Notes of Cases, 282; 9 L. T. O. S. 131; 11 Jur. 357; 166 E. R. 858.

5091. —— Compulsory pilotage.]—(1) Where a vessel is under the charge of a licensed pilot, the employment of whom is compulsory, & is, at the same time, in tow of a steam tug, the latter is bound to obey the orders of the pilot.

(2) In case of a mischief occurring to the vessel occasioned directly by the conduct of the steam tug, the tug, which had not noticed the pilot's signal, cannot in an action brought by the owners of the vessel for damage, set up, as a legal defence, contributory negligence, upon the ground that if the pilot, when the mischief was about to happen, had himself done a certain thing, the mischief might possibly have been avoided.

(2) Great injustice might be done, if, in applying the doctrine of contributory negligence to a case of this sort, the maxim, causa proxima, non remota, spectatur, were lost sight of (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

(3) When the direct & immediate cause of damage is clearly proved to be the fault of deft.; contributory negligence by pltfs. cannot be established merely by showing that if those in charge of the ship had in some earlier state of navigation taken a course, or exercised a control over the course taken by the tug, which they did not actually take or exercise, a different situation would have resulted, in which the same danger might not have occurred (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

(4) Such an omission ought not to be regarded as contributory negligence if it might in the circumstances which actually happened have been unattended with danger but for deft.'s fault, & if it had no proper connection as a cause with the damage which followed as its effect (LORD SELBORNE, C.).—SPAIGHT v. TEDCASTLE (1881), 6 App. Cas. 217; 44 L. 5100. —— ——.]—If, in the performance of a contract to tow, an unforeseen & extraordinary peril arise to the vessel towed, the steam tug is not at liberty to abandon the vessel, but is bound to render her the necessary assistance, & thereupon becomes entitled to salvage reward.

These rights & obligations incident to a contract of towage are implied by law, & the law thereby secures equity to both parties & the true interests of the owners of ships.

A steam tug under contract to tow into dock was lashed alongside a vessel; in rounding to enter the dock basin the tide forced the vessel & the steam tug close to a landing stage, the steam tug next to the stage; the pilot of the vessel hailed the tug to hold on & go ahead, which the tug did, but was forced against the stage & injured:—Held: the steam tug was bound to endeavour to save the vessel from the impending peril, especially upon the order of the pilot, & so doing was entitled to salvage reward, including repayment of all damage & losses thereby incurred.—THE SARATOGA (1861), Lush. 318; 167 E. SUB-SECT. 7.—DUTY OF TOW.

5105. To direct course of tug.]—A bargue in charge of a pilot who was on board her was being towed by a steam tug in waters where the employment of a pilot was compulsory. The tug ported her helm, & passed across the bows of a brig under way, there was no room for the barque to follow in her wake, & the barque came into collision with the brig. The pilot gave no orders to the tug before or after she ported, if he had given proper orders, even after the tug had ported, the collision might have been avoided:—Held: the tug was to blame for attempting to tow the barque across the bows of the brig; but the owners of the barque could not on account of the neglect of the pilot to give proper orders, recover against the tug damages in respect of the collision.—THE ENERGY (1870), L. R. 3 A. & E. 48; 39 L. J. Adm. 25; 23 L. T. 601; 18 W. R. 1009; 3 Mar. L. C. 503.

5106. —— Tow at night with long hawser.]—(1) The schooner J. M. S. having come into collision with a tug & her tow, a damage action in rem was instituted by the owners of the schooner against the tug to recover all the damages occasioned by the collision. Subsequently to the collision pltfs. received from the owners of the tow a sum of money, described in an agreement entered into between these parties "as an advance on account of the damages to be recovered from the owners of the tug." By the agreement it was agreed that the owners of the tow should give pltfs. all information & assistance necessary to bring the action to a successful issue; that if the schooner & the tug should both be held to blame, pltfs. should repay any sum by which the money already paid exceeded the moiety of damages recoverable against the tug, &, that, as a basis of the arrangement, it was understood that the schooner should be found blameless for the collision.

The ct. having found the tug alone to blame, held that the above payment was not such a payment by the tow in satisfaction of the damages occasioned by the collision as amounted to a settlement in discharge of the action, & was consequently no bar to the action & that, notwithstanding the advance paid by the tow, pltfs. were entitled to recover from the defts. all the damages occasioned by the collision.

(2) It is not the duty of those in charge of a tow which is being towed with a long scope of hawser by night at sea to direct the movements of the tug, the circumstances being different to towing by day in a river.—THE STORMCOCK (1885), 53 L. T. 53; 5 Asp. M. L. C. 470.

(2) It is the duty of those on board the vessel in tow to give general directions to the master of the tug as to the towage. But the master of the tug should exercise his discretion as to the proper manœuvres to be employed, especially where he is more competent to form an opinion on this point than the master of the vessel in tow.

(3) It would be a question of fact whether the master of the tug had not taken upon himself the responsibility of managing both the tug & the vessel in tow (HANNEN, J.).

(4) It does not follow that the vessel in tow is to be constantly interfering with the tug, it must depend on the place & on the circumstances, as whether there are numerous small vessels about (HANNEN, J.).—THE ISCA (1886), 12 P. 5114. General rule—Liability for wrongful acts.]—Exposition of the principles of law in cases of damage, where the master of a vessel hires a steam tug to tow her to a certain destination, & the towed ship runs into the tug.

When such a contract is made, it in law implies an engagement that each party to the contract will perform his duty in completing it; that proper skill & diligence will be used on board both the vessel & tug; & that neither party, by neglect or mismanagement, will create unnecessary risk to the other, or increase any risk which might be incidental to the service undertaken. any default on the part of the other, no cause of action arises, as such accident is one of the necessary risks of the engagement to which each party was subject. But, on the other hand, if the wrongful act of either occasions any damage to the other, such wrongful act creates a responsibility on the party committing it, if the other party has not by any misconduct or unskilfulness on his part contributed to the accident.

A steam tug entered into an engagement to tow a vessel. By the misconduct of the master & crew of the vessel in tow, who acted contrary to the directions of the pilot on board the vessel, a collision occurred whereby the tug received damage :—Held: the owner of the tug was entitled to recover for damages, the collision being solely occasioned by the negligent acts of the master & crew of the towed vessel, as in a contract of towage each party contracts to use proper skill & diligence. —BLAND v. ROSS, THE JULIA (1860), 14 Moo. Scow & cargo were lost. The S. was properly navigated :—Held: the master of the S., being thoroughly familiar with the situation, & the set of the tides & currents, & knowing that these would inevitably bring his port against the bridge, creating a dangerous, if not a necessarily fatal situation, was guilty of negligence in not lashing the tow to the starboard side & thus avoiding the possibility of accident ; where, even if the scow in such a case had been wholly sound, the direct consequences of the accident could not have been avoided, the fact of the scow being unseaworthy would not constitute contributory negligence on her part, & would not relieve the tug of any responsibility for damage due to her own negligence.—PATTERSON, CHANDLER & STEPHEN, LTD. v. THE SENATOR JANSON, [1919] 3 W. weather became thick & a sounding indicating shallower water, the master of the barque was about to signal to the tug, when its vessel took the ground, the wind at the time being light & the sea smooth. A second tug then came up & as her master would not take less, the master of the barque agreed to pay £500 if she would assist the first tug in an endeavour to tow the vessel off that tide. The efforts of the two tugs proved unsuccessful & the second tug, having been sent to Grimsby for more tugs, returned with two others, whilst men from the shore assisted the crew in jettisoning some of the cargo. The four tugs then took hold of the vessel & she came off, & was subsequently safely docked at Hull. The owners, masters & crews of all four tugs claimed salvage.

Defts., the owners of ship, cargo, & freight, alleged that the stranding was due to the negligence of the first tug, & counterclaimed against her for the loss of cargo & for any salvage they might have to pay the other salvors. They further submitted that the agreement with the second tug should be set aside as unreasonable & made under duress: —Held: (1) the first tug was responsible for the direction of the course, & having been negligent in respect of it & in not taking soundings, her claim for salvage must be dismissed; (2) on the authority of Smith v. St Lawrence Tow-Boat Co., No. 5051, ante, the counterclaim of defts. must also be dismissed as their master was guilty of contributory negligence in allowing the tug to run on instead of ordering her to haul off when approaching a difficult port in foggy weather.—THE ALTAIR, [1897] P. 105; 66 L. 5126. —— Applies only to defaults in performing contract—Not to abandonment of tow.]—Deft. contracted to tow pltfs.' schooner C. P. on a round voyage of which the first stage was Immingham to Hartlepool. Through the negligence of deft.'s tug masters the vessels got into Robin Hood's Bay on the night of Oct. 23. The tugs got aground & lost their hawsers & the C. P. came to anchor. The tugs got afloat on the early morning of Oct. 24 & proceeded to Hartlepool, leaving the C. P. in the bay with a rising N.E. wind. The C. P. remained in the bay making vain attempts to get out until Oct. 26, when about 3 p.m. she drifted on to the rocks & became a constructive total loss. It appeared that deft. had ordered another tug to go to the C. P., but cancelled the order, as he thought, erroneously, that the Salvage Assocn. had sent tugs to her assistance. In an action by pltfs. for the loss of their vessel by reason of deft.'s breach of contract or duty deft. pleaded the exception clause in the towage contract whereby the tug owner was not responsible (inter alia) for "any damage or loss that may arise to any vessel or craft being towed, or about to be towed, or having been towed, . . . whether such damage arise from or be occasioned by any accident or by any omission, breach of duty, mismanagement, negligence, or default of the steam tug owner, or any of his servants or employees":—Held: as deft. had at any rate temporarily given up any attempt to continue the towage & had left the performance of his duty to others, he could not avail himself of the words "default of the steam tug owner," which only extended to cover defaults during the actual performance of the duties of the contract.—THE CAP PALOS, [1921] P. 458; 91 L. By having more than six vessels in tow at once the master of the tug disobeyed a regulation made by the harbour master of Great Yarmouth under statutory authority:—

5129. —— Insufficient supply of coal.]—THE UNDAUNTED, No. 5058, ante.

5130. ——.]—F. & co., a firm of river carriers, hired a barge from J. for a period of twelve months. While on hire, the barge, which was being towed with five others belonging to various owners by a tug owned by defts., through the negligent navigation of the tug came into collision with pltfs.' barge & damaged her. Defts. admitted liability, but claimed to be indemnified either by H. or F. & co., or by both of them, under the conditions of the terms of towage.

The first term was "that on the hiring or employment of the steam tug the master & crew thereof shall be held to become the servants of & identified with the vessel or craft being towed, & under the control of the person in charge of such vessel or craft during the performance of the contract."

The next sentence, a long one, was in two parts; the first, an exception clause relieving the tug owners from responsibility for various acts, neglects & defaults, ended with a semicolon, & continued as follows "& the owners or persons interested in the vessels or craft so being towed . . . shall & do undertake to bear, satisfy & indemnify the steam tug owners against all liability for the above-mentioned matters & against all costs & charges in respect of any law expenses or actions that may arise or be brought against the said tug owners in relation to any such loss or damage, actual or alleged."

On the facts, the ct. found that the contract with defts. to tow the barge was made on behalf of F. & co. only:—Held: although the first sentence of the conditions of towage might be inapplicable to a case where more than one barge was in tow, it did not follow that the remainder was inapplicable; F. & co. were "persons interested" in the craft being towed, & the conditions imposed upon them an obligation to indemnify defts.; under the indemnity for costs, defts., so far as their own costs against pltfs. were concerned, were entitled to costs as between solr. & client.—THE RIVERMAN, [1928] P. 33; 97 L. J. P. 39; 138 L. T. 303.

5131. "Perils of the sea"—Master of tug exercising honest judgment.]—Where the owner of a steam tug contracts to tow a hull into a port, subject to a condition that he is not to be liable for the breaking of hawsers or perils of the sea, & the master, exercising an honest judgment, does what eventually leads to the loss of the hull by reason of perils of the sea, the owner is not liable for negligence.—ORGE v. NEW STEAM-TUG CO. (1858), 31 L. T. O. S. 85.

5132. "All transporting to be at owner's risk"—No protection against negligence.]—By a tender in writing, accepted by pltfs., defts. undertook to carry out certain repairs to pltfs.' vessel, &, for that purpose, to "transport vessel from berth to dry dock, finding all tugs, pilots, watermen & boats, sufficient hands for managing ship . . . & all items of transportation to loading berth." In the margin were printed the words "all transporting to be at owners' risk."

During the transportation of the vessel at night, with the aid of one tug, from dry dock to loading berth, she got adrift from the tug, & sustained damage, owing to the parting of an alleged defective rope belonging to the ship, & to the delay caused by the thimble eye of a wire hawser, also belonging to the ship, not fitting the towing hook:—Held: defts. were liable, for, after undertaking to find "all items of transportation," they had omitted to ascertain that the necessary items, whether belonging to the ship or not, were efficient for the purpose, & owing to this neglect on their part, two tugs were, in the particular case, required for the safe handling of the vessel. Defts., therefore, could not avail themselves of the marginal note as a protection against their own negligence, for the meaning of the contract, in respect of the transportation, was that, if defts. exercised reasonable care & skill in carrying it out, pltfs. would incur the risks incidental to navigation.—THE FORFARSHIRE, [1908] P. 339; 78 L. 5136. Notice of condition—Question of fact.]—The master of a steam tug, of which defts. were owners, was employed by pltf. to tow his smack out of a harbour. In so doing the smack was stranded through the alleged negligence of the master. Pltf. had on previous occasions hired defts.' steam tug, & on paying the charge had received a receipt, upon the back of which was printed a notice that defts. would not be answerable for damage occasioned by any supposed negligence of their servants:—Held: it was a question for the jury whether the contract was made on the terms printed on the back of the receipts.—SYMONDS v. PAIN (1861), 6 H. & N. 709; 30 L. 5137. Acceptance of condition—Condition applicable to specified tugs—Damage by unspecified tug—Owner of tow director of tug company.]—A tug while towing pltf.'s vessel came into collision with & sank her. The tug was chartered by defts., a co., to work with their own tugs, & one of the terms on which the co. towed vessels was that they would not be answerable for loss or damage to any vessel in tow of their tugs, which were specified by name, whether occasioned by the negligence of their servants or otherwise. The tug in question was not one of those specified, but pltf. was a director of deft. co., & was aware of the chartering of the tug:—Held: pltf. must be taken to have impliedly agreed to employ the tug on the same terms as the other tugs of the co., & his claim was therefore barred by the condition.

By the terms of the above charterparty defts. were to appoint a captain as pilot, & all damages were to be for charterer's account. The collision was occasioned solely by the negligence of defts.' captain:—Held: an action in rem would not lie against the tug, for the maritime lien arising from collision is not absolute, & the owners not being personally liable for this collision, & the charterers being exempted by the terms of their contract with pltf., the primâ facie liability of the vessel was rebutted.—THE

SECT. 1.—DEFINITION.

5148. Striking together of navigable objects.]—Pltf. underwrote a time policy on a steamer, containing a clause that if the steamer should come into collision with any other vessel & the insured should have to pay damages the insurers would pay. Deft. underwrote a policy of re-insurance on the same steamer for same period, subject to same clauses & conditions as the original policy & to pay as might be paid thereon, but only to pay all claims for loss or damage done or received through collision. During the period covered the steamer struck a barge, which had just been sunk by collision with another vessel & the steamer was damaged. The barge was raised next day, & sailed to her home port & was repaired:—Held: although at the moment when the steamer struck her, the barge could not have been navigated, yet, as she became navigable as soon as she was raised there was a collision between two navigable vessels, in respect of which pltf. was entitled to recover on the policy of re-insurance.

The coble was of ten tons burthen, twenty four feet in length, decked forward only, with two movable masts, & a sail for each. She was accustomed to go twenty miles out to sea, & to remain out for some hours at a time, & was usually under sail, but was sometimes propelled by oars when convenient. An inquest was held on the body of one of the men who was lost, & a solr. appointed by the Board of Trade took notes of the evidence, & forwarded them to the Board, who applied to two justices to hold an inquiry into the collision. The justices held the inquiry, decided that the coble was a seagoing ship, that there was a collision between two ships, & that the master & mate of the steamer did not duly render assistance to save life, & ordered that the certificates of the master & mate of the steamer should be suspended for three months:—Held: (1) if the coble were a ship, one ship had caused loss to another, & even if she were not, there was a casualty to the steamship, & therefore there was a case for investigation by the magistrates under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 433; (2) the word "ship" applied to all craft

5151. Duty to give notice of launch—Customary or reasonable notice.]—(1) When a launch is about to take place in a river, reasonable notice of the intended launch should be given; & such notice must be sufficiently specific, with respect to the time when the launch is to take place, as to prevent vessels navigating in the river from unknowingly incurring risk or loss.

(2) It is further necessary that a good look out should be kept, & great care should be taken to prevent the launch from coming into collision with any other vessel.—THE BLENHEIM (1846), 2 Wm. Rob. 421; 4 Notes of Cases, 393; 10 Jur. 79; 166 E. R. 814.

5152. —— ——.]—(1) On the occasion of a ship's launch, those in charge of the launch are bound to give the customary notice; if there is no custom, then reasonable notice.

As to what is adequate notice, if one custom is universally observed, it is sufficient to show that that custom was followed, because . . . no one is bound to do more than the custom of the place requires. . . . You will have to consider whether, in the circumstances, those in charge of the launch ought not to have obtained the assistance of the harbour-master to keep the way clear, or at least whether they ought not to have had boats in attendance to give timely warning to vessels (DR. (3) In a cause of damage by collision with a launch, sufficient notice having been given of the intended launch, the other ship was held to blame for not having kept out of the way.

(4) In the river Mersey to give notice of a launch taking place it is customary to have the ship dressed in flags for an hour or more before high water, about which time the launch takes place; to have tugs, one at least also dressed in flags, plying about some time before the launch in front of the yard where the ship is lying; & there are usually a number of small boats lying off ready to pick up timber when the ship comes away.—THE GLENGARRY (1874), 2 P. 5168. —— —— Request to slip anchor—Unreasonable refusal to comply.]—Defts., being about to launch a steamship which they had built in their shipbuilding yard on the Mersey, arranged with the owners of a buoy which was thought to be in the line of the launch for its removal. The buoy was removed, but its mooring chains were left unmarked at the bottom of the river. Pltf.'s ketch, which was sailing up the river on the flood tide on the morning of the intended launch, finding the wind falling light, let go her starboard anchor & drifted up the river dragging her anchor, which fouled the mooring chains. The master being unable to free the anchor, defts. sent messages to him warning him that his ketch was in a dangerous position & advising him to slip his anchor & clear away, but the master refused to slip unless defts would make themselves answerable for the anchor. Defts., deeming it dangerous to life & property to postpone the launch & believing the risk of a collision with the ketch to be slight, launched the steamship, & a collision occurred. In an action of damage by collision brought by the owners of the ketch:—Held: the ketch acted unreasonably in refusing to slip her anchor & was alone to blame, inasmuch as defts., in the dilemma in which they were placed by the action of the ketch, rightly chose the lesser of two risks.—FRANCES (OWNERS) v. HIGHLAND LOCH (OWNERS), THE HIGHLAND LOCH, [1912] A. R. 3 A. & E. 500; 41 L. J. Adm. 38; 26 L. T. 322; 1 Asp. M. L. C. 249.

SUB-SECT. 3.—CARRYING AND DROPPING ANCHOR.

5172. Steamer grounding in front of overtaken schooner—Duty of schooner to drop anchor—To avoid collision.]—Where a steamer coming up a river during a high spring tide, & late at night, after passing a schooner also coming up the river, took the ground, & whilst aground was subsequently run into by the schooner:—Held: even assuming the steamer to have been 300 yds. ahead when she grounded, it was not the duty of the schooner, under the circumstances, to have dropped her anchor, with the view of avoiding the collision & the steamer was solely to blame.—THE ELIZABETH, THE ADALIA (1870), 22 L. T. 74; 3 Mar. L. C. 345.

5173. Vessel prevented from dropping anchor—Inevitable accident.]—(1) A vessel in port was moored to a buoy, the use of which was sanctioned by the authorities, & a storm being expected, she also had her anchor ready to drop. The mooring buoy broke & the vessel drifted. She attempted to cast anchor, but was prevented by inevitable accident. She came into collision with another vessel which was properly moored:—Held: the first vessel had not contributed by negligence to the collision.

(2) Where the master of a ship takes all such precautions as a man of ordinary prudence & skill, exercising reasonable foresight, would use to avert danger, his owners are not held responsible because he may have omitted some possible precaution which the event suggests that he might have resorted to.

5174. Second anchor—Duty to ensure efficiency of.]—The steamship J., riding to her port anchor in the Downs, where a number of vessels were brought up, was run into & broken adrift by the steamship Z. There was an ebb tide of the force of three or four knots, & the J., drifted down & collided with the steamship C., which was anchored about 500 yards away. The starboard anchor of the J. was on the forecastle head & could only be let go by means of the crane & catfall. Two of the blocks of the catfall were broken by the first collision. There was evidence that if the catfall had been uninjured it would have taken eight to ten minutes to let go the anchor. The engines of the J. were put full speed ahead when it was found that the second anchor could not be used. In an action by the owners of the C. against the owners of the J. & the owners of the Z. :—Held: both the J. & the Z. were to blame. The Z. was to blame for her negligence in breaking the J. adrift, & the J. was also in fault inasmuch as in a place like the Downs ordinary careful seamanship required that, whether steam was being kept up or not, the second anchor should be so placed that it could be let go at once if necessity arose.—THE JESSIE & THE ZAANLAND, [1917] P. 138; 86 L. SUB-SECT. 4.—STEERING GEAR.

5175. Breakdown of steam steering gear—Failure to have hand gear available.]—In an action of damage by collision, it appeared that pltf.'s vessel was at anchor in the Mersey when deft.'s steamer ran into her in broad daylight. The defence was that the steam steering gear of deft.'s vessel failed to act in consequence of some latent defect, or obstruction, which could not have been ascertained or prevented by the exercise of any reasonable care or skill on the part of defts. & that the collision & damage were caused by inevitable accident. The steam steering gear in question was good of its kind; it had never previously failed to act, & the cause of the defect in the machine, or of the obstruction in the working, could not be discovered by competent persons. Part of the gear, including some portion of the chain, running between the wheel & the rudder, had been recently renewed, & it was admitted that new chain is liable to stretch, but it was proved that before the vessel left her anchorage to proceed on her voyage, the whole of the gear had been tested & found in good order, & that the chain had been tightened up as occasion seemed to require:—Held: defts. were liable, as they had not satisfied the burden of proof, for, in order to support the defence of inevitable accident, & disprove the primâ facie evidence of negligence, it was necessary for them to show that the cause of the accident was one not produced by them, & the result of which they could not avoid, but defts. knew of the tendency of new chain to stretch, & therefore that an accumulation of links at the leading wheels might possibly cause jamming, & considering the crowded condition of the river where the accident occurred, the use—or readiness for immediate use—of hand, instead of steam, steering gear, was a means by which the result could have been avoided.—THE MERCHANT PRINCE, [1892] P. 179; 67 L. 5176. —— ——.]—It is the duty of those in charge of a steamship steered by steam gear in a narrow river, where the navigation is difficult & other vessels are likely to be met, to have the hand gear available for use in case of the failure of the steam steering gear, even where there is no reason to apprehend the failure of the steam gear.—THE TURRET COURT (1900), 69 L. J. P. 117.

SUB-SECT. 5.—TAKING TUG ASSISTANCE.

5177. Failure to obtain tug assistance—Steamship taking up anchor in gale.]—A steamship whilst getting up her anchors in a gale of wind to proceed to a safer anchorage, negligently failed to obtain the assistance of a tug so as to enable her to perform the manœuvre safely. She was in consequence driven against a pier, where she again negligently abstained for a considerable time from taking the assistance of a tug, which was offered to her. Having ultimately taken such assistance, she was towed in the only direction then possible, when, coming into a heavy seaway & the full force of a strong gale, the towing hawser parted, & she was driven ashore, doing damage to pltf.'s property. There was no negligence on the part of the ship after she took the assistance of the tug. The Trinity Masters having advised the ct. that the breaking of the tow rope was a thing that would "very probably" happen, considering the direction in which it was necessary to tow the ship after she had collided with the pier, & considering the wind & weather she would meet whilst being towed:—Held: the damage following upon such breaking of the tow rope was a natural consequence of deft.'s original negligence, & the owners of the ship were liable for such damage.—THE GERTOR (1894), 70 L. T. 703; 7 Asp. M. L. C. 472.

SUB-SECT. 6.—LOOK OUT.

5178. Necessity for look out.]—(1) The rule is, that when two vessels approach each other on opposite tacks, especially when one is close-hauled & the other has the wind free, the latter must give way; & if both have the wind against them, the one on the larboard tack must give way, & the one on the starboard tack keep her course (DR. 5186. —— Superior officer relinquishing charge to inferior.]—(1) The "Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea," made under the authority of Merchant Shipping Acts, 1854 to 1873, must, under 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 17, be strictly followed. Actual necessity, not considerations of discretion & expediency, even though skilfully acted on, can alone excuse their non-observance. The K. & the V., two large steam vessels, coming in opposite directions, sighted each other at a considerable distance; they ultimately came into collision. The K. alleged that when the two vessels were fast approaching each other, the V. improperly changed its course; that the master of the K. could not rely on the V. taking a particular course; that to meet possible contingencies he ordered his engineers to stand to their engines, & almost instantly afterwards gave the order to starboard the helm, which he deemed would prevent or greatly mitigate the collision, & then stopped & reversed the engines. This was not exactly the order required by the Regulations, which directed that in such a case the engines should be stopped & reversed:—Held: the statutes & Regulations had not left the master of the K. a discretion in the matter; he was bound to stop & reverse the engines, & as he had not done so at the first moment of danger, he had disregarded the Regulations, & consequently that the K. must be held in part responsible.

(2) The gentlemen of skill in the Admlty. Ct. appear to have been of opinion that the conduct of the second officer in relinquishing his charge to one of inferior rank, at a time when his vessel was actually manœuvring in order to keep clear of an approaching steamer was very reprehensible (LORD WATSON).

(3) A man may not do the right thing, nay may even do the wrong thing, & yet not be guilty of neglect of his duty, which is not absolutely to do right at all events but only to take reasonable care & use reasonable skill; & I agree that when a man is suddenly & without warning thrown into a critical position, due allowance should be made for this, but not too much (LORD BLACKBURN).

(4) [The statutory rule] was enacted with a view to obviate the risk & minimise the results of collision; & the more imminent the risk the more imperative is the necessity for implicit obedience to the rule (LORD WATSON).

In a cause of damage instituted by the owners of the barque against the owners of the steamship :—Held : (1) the damages, losses, & costs, must be borne equally between the two vessels, for the barque was in fault in carrying lights not so placed as to comply with the regulations ; & the steamship was in fault in going at an improper rate, 11 knots an hour, on a hazy night in a crowded channel ; &, after the collision, in pursuing her course without affording or tendering any help to the barque.

5221. —— ——.]—In the Ct. of Admlty., where there has been misconduct on the part of both vessels in a collision, the sum total of the joint damage is payable by the two in equal shares. There is an exception to this rule where a want of proper look out on the part of one of the vessels occasioned the accident.

17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 298, disentitles the owner of a ship guilty of a breach of the Admlty. regulations from recovering in the Ct. of Admlty.

Upon the question arising, whether the owners of cargo lost by the collision is in eadem conditione with the owner of the vessel as to the right to recover, the ct. held, that though both ships are to blame, the owner of the cargo not having any control over the blameworthy master & mariners of the vessel upon which his goods were carried, is not to be considered as having any share in the delictum, so as to be thereby disentitled to recover either under the old law of the Admlty. or under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 298. He has a claim, therefore, upon the other vessel for the one-half of his loss.

5223. —— Preceding vessel obscured by smoke.]—It is negligence on the part of a steamer to go at full speed under steam & sail before the wind whilst her smoke is blown over her bows so as to obscure her lights, & to prevent her from seeing & from being seen by other ships approaching from an opposite direction.

Where a steam ship is approaching another, whose exact course cannot be at once ascertained by reason of her lights being obscured by her own smoke, it is the duty of the former to slacken speed & to wait till that course is ascertained before taking any decided step to avoid the other vessel; if before having ascertained the exact course of the other, she, without slackening speed, executes a manœuvre, which, although appearing to be right at the time, contributes to the collision, she will be to blame.

It is clear that two vessels so steering could not be considered as vessels each having the other not more than a point on her bow, or as meeting end on within the meaning of the rule (SIR B. PEACOCK).—THE RONA, THE AVA (1873), 29 L. T. 781; 2 Asp. M. L. C. 182, P. C.

5224. —— In fishing ground—Near trawler.]—THE PICTON, No. 5574, post.

5225. —— In fogbound channel.]—Where a collision has taken place between two vessels in a fog, the nature & extent of the damage caused thereby is not a reliable test as to whether one of the vessels which was sounding the two long blast signal, indicating that she was stopped in the water, was doing so without being in fact so stopped, & therefore, in breach of Article 15 (b) of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea.

In a collision action a vessel may be held to blame when the damage resulting from the collision has been occasioned by & is attributable to improper conduct on her part, although the other vessel may be solely to blame for the collision owing to her negligent navigation.

On June 17, 1914, at 2.40 p.m. a collision took place in the English Channel in a dense fog between the I., a screw steamship of 3,000 tons gross & 1,973 tons net register, which was on a course E. by S. heavily loaded with a cargo of grain, & the K., a twin screw liner of 19,360 tons gross & 6,352 tons net register, which was on a course S.S.W., the stem of the I. coming in contact with the starboard side of the K. & both vessels being damaged. The owners of the I. brought an action of damage against the owners of the K. The evidence for the I. was that at 2.35 p.m., when her speed was slow & her one long blast fog signal was being sounded, those on board of her first heard the whistle of the K., four points on the port bow; that the engines of the I. were at once stopped, that a minute & a half afterwards she lost steering way; that at 2.38 she lost all headway, as the second officer inferred from the fact that he could see no ripple from the edges of her overlapping plates; & that she then sounded the two long blast signal indicating that she had lost all headway. The evidence for the K. was that until 2.32 she had been travelling at half speed or 18 knots; that then her speed was reduced to dead slow, & her one blast signal was sounded; that in these circumstances those on board of her first heard the one long blast signal of the I., four points on the starboard bow; that thereupon the engines of the K. were stopped, that the I. then sounded the two long blast signal, indicating that she was making no headway, & repeated it; that thereupon one minute after the K.'s engines had been stopped they were put slow ahead, & after another minute they were put at half speed or 18 knots & that the I. then came into view & the collision took place. The ct. were advised by their Nautical Assessors that the I. would have lost steerage way when her speed was still about one knot per hour through the water:—Held: having regard to the weight of the I. & her cargo, the interval of time between her losing steerage way, when she still had a speed of a knot through the water, & her first sounding the two blast signal was not sufficiently great for her to have stopped completely when she sounded that signal, that those on board of her were mistaken on this point; she therefore sounded the two blast signal before she had in fact lost all her headway, thus committing a breach of Article 15 (b) of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea & deceiving the K., & she must therefore be held to blame; but it was unseamanlike, & dangerous navigation on the part of those in charge of the K., & a breach of Article 16 of the Regulations to put a vessel of her size, power, & speed at half speed or eighteen knots in a dense fog, in so crowded an area as the English Channel; the K., by her excessive speed, had contributed to the collision & increased the damage & that she also must be held to blame.—THE KAISER WILHELM II. 5285. Anchor in improper position—Buoy placed over anchor—Whether ship relieved from liability.]—In an action on a case for an injury done to pltf.'s ship by her striking on the anchor of deft.'s:—Held: it was no ground of defence that one of the crew of pltf.'s ship, before she took up the position in which she received the injury, was warned by a person on board another ship which had occupied the same position, that she was leaving it because there was an anchor somewhere near; & if the anchor was in an improper place it was no defence that a buoy was placed over it.

5287. —— Carried stock above water.]—A dumb barge, by the negligent navigation of those in charge of her, was suffered to come into contact with a schooner moored to a mooring buoy in the river Thames. The schooner had her anchor hanging over her bow with the stock above water, contrary to the Thames bye-laws. The anchor made a hole in the barge & caused damage to her cargo, but for the improper position of the anchor neither the barge nor her cargo would have received any damage. In an action of damage by the owners of the barge against the schooner:—Held: both vessels were to blame, & therefore the owners of the barge were entitled to half the damage sustained.

In order to establish a cause of action, the ct. must find not only that there was a collision, & that it was the result of the negligence of defts., but that some damage was done (BRETT, L.J.).—THE MARGARET (1881), 6 P. D. 76; 50 L. J. P. 67; 44 L. T. 291; 29 W. R. 533; 4 Asp. M. L. C. 375, C. A.

I apprehend that when a vessel is lying on the shore, & another vessel is placed voluntarily by her owners, or those who are acting on their behalf, in such a position that damage will happen if some event arises which it is not possible to control, the owners of the second vessel must be responsible for the damage (DR. 5293. —— —— —— ——.]—A clipper built ship has no right to place herself in such a berth as would make it inevitable that she must take the ground on an ebb tide, to the probable risk of other vessels moored in the vicinity.

A clipper built ship not being able to get up to her discharging berth at a wharf, owing to the number of ships before her, moored herself in an anchorage ground outside, in a berth where there was not sufficient draught of water for her to lie afloat at low tide, in consequence of which she listed over on a vessel anchored alongside:—Held: the clipper ship so mooring herself was answerable in damages for the injuries sustained by the vessel anchored alongside of & berthed previously to the time of the clipper ship taking up her moorings where she did.—THE INDIAN v. THE JESSIE (1865), 12 L. 5306. Duty of master to change foul berth—Although vessel placed in berth by pilot.]—The W. A. in charge of a pilot came to anchor in the Mersey & gave the B. T. a foul berth. Various remonstrances were from time to time made by those on board the B. T. & after a few days the vessels in swinging to the tide came into collision:—Held: the owners of the W. A. were responsible for the damage, because while the vessel was at anchor, the employment of the pilot was not compulsory, even if the pilot had not properly moored the W. A. her master was not relieved from responsibility, & therefore her owners were liable for the damage.

The argument which in these ircumstances would still continue the responsibility of the pilot & the consequent immunity of the master is to this effect, that a pilot because he has improperly moored a vessel remains on that account in charge of her, & that the master, though aware that she has been improperly moored, has authority to shift her berth. I am glad to say that, in my opinion, this proposition has no legal authority, because I think it would be fraught with mischief to the interests of navigation & to the discipline of ships (SIR R. PHILLIMORE).—THE WOBURN ABBEY (1869), 38 L. J. Adm. 28; 20 L. T. 621; 3 Mar. L. C. 240.

(3) If that person acts in error of judgment, when placed by the colliding vessel in a position of difficulty calling for instant decision, he is entitled to favourable consideration, & it must be shown that any alternative course would have prevented or mitigated the collision.

Being thus placed, entirely by the erroneous conduct of the Meanatchy, in a position of difficulty in which an instant step was imperative, he became entitled, as this & other tribunals have often held, to claim a favourable consideration for the action which he decided to take, even if it should afterwards appear that such action was not the best possible (SIR FRANCIS JEUNE).—MARY TUG CO. v. BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGA-

On the brig striking the steamer, the ring of one of the buoys carried away, & the steamer got adrift, & drove down the river, & ultimately came in contact with & did damage to a barque, whose owners instituted a cause of damage against the steamer in the county ct. of Northumberland, to recover for the damage done to their vessel by the steamer. At the hearing it was proved that the chain cables of the steamer had been unbent at the time she got adrift, & that no look out had previously been kept on deck, though it was known that the weather was getting worse :—Held : a defence of inevitable accident, set up by the owners of the steamer, was not sustained, & the steamer was alone to blame for the collision.—THE PLADDA (1876), 2 P. 5326. —— ——.]—There is no principle of Admlty. law which precludes an innocent ship damaged by collision through the fault of two other ships from recovering the whole damage from either of the delinquent ships.

In cases of collision the question of the identity of a tow with its tug is a question of fact, & where a collision occurs through the faulty navigation of the tug, & the tow is, as regards navigation, completely under the control of the tug & does not stand to the latter in the relation of master & servant, the tow is to be regarded as an innocent ship in no sense identified with the delinquent tug.

Where a dumb barge in tow of a tug, which had the sole control & management of the navigation, was damaged by collision with a third vessel owing to the faulty navigation of the tug & the third vessel, & the owners of the tow brought an action in rem against the owners of the third vessel only :—Held : defts. were liable for the whole damage.

The M.'s head tug was blowing the regulation towing signals, but no whistle signals were being sounded on the M. herself, who had only got steam on her donkey boiler to work the winches:—Held: the rules of good seamanship did not require the M. to sound her whistle, as to do so would be misleading to other vessels, as it might lead them into the belief that she had steam on her main engines; &, further, as she & her tugs had not commenced to turn, although they were preparing to do so, it would have been wrong for the turning signal to have been given.—THE MARMION (1913), 29 T. 5354. Whether barge must have man in attendance when not under way.]—Between 6 & 7 o'clock on an October evening, the man in charge of a laden barge left her moored in a dock lighted by the electric light.

Between 7 p.m. & 8 p.m. a steam tug used in shifting craft, in the dock ran into her, & when the man returned at 9 p.m. he found the barge sunk.

In an action of damage by collision, brought in the City of London Ct., by the owners of the barge against the owners of the tug the judge held that in law, there was no duty on the owner of a barge, to have a man on board of her when moored in a dock, & on the facts, the tug must be pronounced alone to blame. On appeal, on the ground (inter alia) that there was contributory negligence on the part of the owners of the barge in leaving her without any one in charge of her, who might have averted the collision, or beached the barge afterwards:—Held: the appeal must be dismissed, for the absence of a person on the barge had nothing to do with the collision, & it would have been impracticable to have beached the barge afterwards.—THE HORNET, [1892] P. 361; 68 L. 5363. Right to navigate on either side of river.]—A screw steamship had just come out of the Regent's Canal Dock in the river Thames, about 2 a.m. on a December morning, when she came into collision with a dumb barge which was drifting up the river with the flood tide, & without having any light exhibited:—Held: the steamship might, under the circumstances, have kept out of the way of the barge, & she ought to have done so, & that she was alone to blame for the collision.

It has been laid down in recent decisions that vessels may navigate on either side of the river. . .

It is further said that the barge is to blame because she carried no light. But there is no regulation requiring dumb barges to carry any light, & there is a great difficulty in imposing a duty beyond the letter of the regulations. What light ought a dumb barge to carry? The ordinary lights would tend to mislead, & no provision has been made authorising a dumb barge to carry any special light. I cannot, therefore, hold that the barge was to blame for not having carried a light.

There is no duty imposed by statute upon a barge to get out of the way of a steamer; nor do I consider there was any such duty imposed upon the Lord Clarendon [the dumb barge] in the special circumstances of the case. On the contrary, it was the duty of the steamer to get out of the way of the barge (SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE).—THE OWEN WALLIS (1874), L. R. 4 A. & E. 175; 43 L. J. Adm. 36; 30 L. T. 41; 22 W. (2) In the absence of any rule of the road, regulation, or custom, there is no duty on the part of a keel or barge drifting up a river to keep out of the deep water navigation & navigate in the shallow water, even though by remaining in the deep water she obstructs the passage of steamships which can only navigate in the deep water.

(3) A keel with her mast lowered may drive up on a flood tide in any part of a river lashed to another keel, but it is her duty in such circumstances to go up dredging with her anchor down, in order that she may thereby have the means in an emergency of bringing herself up if necessary & whilst two keels may drive up lashed together there is no less duty imposed on them to dredge.—THE RALPH CREYKE (1886), 55 L. SUB-SECT. 15.—NAVIGATION IN RIVERS AND NARROW WATERS.

A. Tide and Current.

5371. Steamer entering narrow cut at too early period of tide—Liability for damage to sailing vessel.]—Where a steam tug was run down by a sailing vessel, in a narrow cut, leading to a dock, navigable only at a particular period of the tide, at which period the collision occurred, the tug, proceeding in an opposite direction, held to be to blame.—THE EFFORT (1847), 5 Notes of Cases, 279.

5372. Flood tide—Duty to navigate carefully.]—The tide being little more than threequarters flood . . . & the night not particularly clear, it is perfectly manifest . . . that it was the duty of those on board the steamer to navigate with great care & great caution . . . because, being a flood tide, vessels would be met (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE TRIDENT (1854), 1 Ecc. & Ad. 217; 164 E. R. 126.

5373. Exceptional current—Necessity for keeping anchor in readiness.]—The fact of a vessel under steam colliding with a ship at her moorings in daylight is primâ facie evidence of fault; & her owners cannot escape liability except by proving that a competent officer could not have averted the collision by the exercise of ordinary care & skill.

Where a steamship under way collided with a vessel at her morrings in daylight in consequence of an exceptional current, known to be a possible though improbable occurrence, & it was proved that there was delay in dropping her anchor, & that the other anchor was not in readiness, she was found to have neglected ordinary precautions, & her owners were held liable.—THE CITY OF PEKING v. COMPAGNIE DES MESSAGERIES MARITIMES, THE CITY OF PEKING (1888), 14 App. Cas. 40; 58 L. J. P. C. 64; 61 L. T. 136; 6 Asp. M. L. C. 396, P. C.; subsequent proceedings (1890), 15 App. Cas. 438, P. C.

5374. —— Must be such that competent seaman could not avert collision—By exercise of ordinary care & skill.]—Defts.' steamship, whilst proceeding, in daylight, out of the harbour of Singapore, ran into & sank pltfs.' vessel at her moorings. The defence set up was inevitable accident due to an abnormal current, &, in the alternative, compulsory pilotage:—Held: defts. were liable, for they had not succeeded in establishing the existence of the abnormal current relied on, &, therefore, the onus of proof being on them, they had failed to show that a competent seaman could not have averted or mitigated the disaster by the exercise of ordinary care & skill.—THE POLYNÉSIEN, [1910] P. 28; 79 L. J. P. 45; 101 L. T. 749; 11 Asp. M. L. C. 354.

5375. —— Causing failure of helm to answer—Whether vessel ought to avoid current—Current known to be variable.]—The Strait of Messina is a narrow channel within Article 21 of the Admlty. Regulations for preventing Collisions at Sea:—Held: (1) the A. L. by infringing the said article occasioned the collision which afterwards happened & failed to establish that the R. by anything which she did contributed to it or could in any way have avoided it; the R.'s helm having been put hard aport in a way which if successful would have put her on such a course as would have determined the risk of collision, the duty of reversing her engines did not arise till it was discovered that the vessel, owing to the action of a current, was not obeying her helm.

It is further contended that precautions ought to have been taken by the Rhondda to avoid this current, or whatever it is to be called, because it is found noted in the charts, & must be taken to be a thing that persons navigating this channel ought to have in their contemplation. But there is nothing to show that, under ordinary circumstances, there would be any risk in a vessel coming round there. The current & the eddy are variable. Nobody can tell for certain that they will be felt at a particular place; &, above all, the Rhondda had no reason to anticipate that the operation of the current or eddy would have any bearing upon her duty with reference to the Alsace Lorraine, because she had a right to expect that the coast would be clear from steamers coming out in the direction in which the Alsace Lorraine was (HANNEN, P.).

B. Rounding Bends.

5376. Duty of vessel going against tide—To proceed cautiously—Thames—Baldwin Point.]—Where vessels are approaching each other at Baldwin Point in Bow Creek, which is a blind corner & a difficult bend to navigate, good seamanship requires that a vessel going up with the tide shall give such warning as will enable vessels which may be coming down against the tide to approach the bend in such a way as to prevent any collision.

It is the duty of vessels coming down against the tide to proceed cautiously, &, if necessary, stop above the bend altogether.

In the City of London Ct. the judge held that a vessel going up with the tide approaching this bend was alone to blame for a collision with a down comer for failing to warn her. The Div. Ct. varied this order on appeal, holding that both vessels were to blame, the one going up for not giving sufficient warning & the one coming down for proceeding carelessly at such a speed that she could not have avoided a collision with an innocent vessel if she met one at the bend.—THE KENNET, [1912] P. 114; 81 L. J. P. 82; 12 Asp. M. L. C. 120, D. C.

5377. —— To wait at bend—Scheldt.]—In an action for collision between two vessels under steam in the River Scheldt, it appeared that the vessels were proceeding in opposite directions, the one up & the other down the river, & that the vessel going up the river had the tide against her. The collision took place at a strong bend of the river. It did not appear that any positive rule had been printed & circulated with regard to the navigation of the river; but, by the practice of navigation there, it was the duty of a vessel navigating against the tide to wait until a vessel coming in the opposite direction had cleared her at the bend:—Held: upon proof that the vessel navigating against the tide had disregarded this practice she must be taken to have been to blame for the collision.—THE TALABOT (1890), 15 P. D. 194; 63 L. T. 812; 6 Asp. M. L. C. 602.

5378. —— —— Upper Humber—Whitton gas float No. 3.]—Although there is no positive rule with regard to the navigation of the narrow deep water channel in the neighbourhood of Whitton gas float No. 3 in the Upper Humber, the practice, based on good seamanship, requires that those in charge of a steamship, proceeding against the flood tide, should avoid meeting another vessel at the gas float, & should, therefore, wait until the vessel proceeding with the tide has rounded the bend.—THE EZARDIAN, [1911] P. 92; 80 L. Reach, to swing & dredge up stern first, with the result that, not being under proper control, she was carried, at an excessive speed, into collision with deft.'s steamship, which was coming down the reach, & which contributed to the collision by starboarding after giving a port helm signal:—Held: both vessels were to blame, pltfs.' vessel for excessive speed due to failing to observe the seamanlike precaution of swinging in the reach, in accordance with the local practice; defts.' vessel for wrongly starboarding, & failing to obey Article 28 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea by indicating her helm movement with the appropriate whistle signal.—THE FRANKFORT, [1910] P. 50; 79 L. (2) A steamship bound up the Thames on a flood tide ought not to leave a wharf & get under way in a dense fog.

(3) Semble: if a vessel is overtaken by dense fog, in such circumstances, the proper mode for her to go up is dredging up stern first with her anchor down, so that she can be brought up at any moment.—THE AGUADILLANA (1889), 60 L. T. 897; 6 Asp. M. L. C. 390.

5384. (2) Semble: a proper signal under such circumstances would be a prolonged blast of the steam whistle of not less than five seconds' duration.—THE JUNO (1894), 71 L. T. 341; 7 Asp. M. L. C. 506; 11 R. 679.

The weather was thick with fog, & though daylight, the barge was exhibiting her riding light; but her bell was not being rung. The barge was suddenly seen a few yards ahead, & the stem of the tender struck the port side amidships of the barge a heavy blow & sank her:—Held: the negligence of those in charge of both vessels had contributed to the collision, & both were to blame, for the barge was in the "fairway" as defined in The Blue Bell, [1895] P. 242, & therefore, on account of the fog, bound to ring her bell under Medway Conservancy by-laws, Article 43 (c); but if not coming under that art. she was, in the circumstances, & in the opinion of the nautical assessors, bound to indicate her position by sound signals as a seamanlike precaution within the meaning of Article 48.—THE CLUTHA BOAT 147, [1909] P. 36; 78 L. 5402. Duty of incoming vessel.] — A vessel coming up the Thames on a dark night, with the wind at south, & preparing to anchor, if she descries another vessel approaching her in a straight line, ought to port her helm, & pass the approaching vessel on the larboard side, before rounding to & anchoring; but if she has starboarded her helm, before seeing the other vessel, she will not be held to blame for a collision ensuing, although the approaching vessel, not aware of the intention of the other vessel to anchor, has herself observed the Trinity House rule, & taken her own measures, on the supposition that the other vessel would pass to leeward of her.

A steam vessel was carrying a common light on the starboard bow, & a red light on the larboard; a question arose in a case of collision, whether at a particular time, the steamer's head was to the south; the evidence on behalf of the opposing vessel stated, that a light was seen, but not a red light. The Trinity Masters being of opinion that if the steamer's head was to the south, according to the relative positions of the two vessels the red light would not be visible to the other vessel, the fact that such light was not seen held to be decisive on the question of the position of the steamer's head.—THE SHANNON (1842), 1 Wm. The harbour master, whose orders he was bound to obey, ordered him to go ahead, & at the same time ordered the T. to go astern. The T. reversed her engines, but only sufficiently to keep her stationary, as the wind & tide were drifting her towards the lock. A collision took place between the port sponson of the tug & the port bow of the T.:—Held: the tug was not to blame, because (1) an incoming ship should give way to an outgoing ship; (2) the master of the tug was bound to obey the order of the harbour master to go ahead; (3) the T. had disobeyed the order to go astern.—TAYLOR v. BURGER (1898), 78 L. Both ships had their side lights lighted & ready to be exhibited, & neither was guilty of any delay in exhibiting a side light after becoming aware of the presence of the other ship.

Pltfs., the owners of the cargo laden on one of the ships which sank in consequence of the collision, alleged that to navigate without lights, even under Admlty. directions, constituted negligence & a breach of Articles 1 & 2 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea:—Held: the regulations must be read as a whole; the complete disregard by the Germans of all rules of international law & of the practice of civilised people in the conduct of war had brought into existence a new danger of navigation in an area of the high seas in which the vessels were navigating; & in navigating with their lights screened, both vessels were doing what was justified & required by Article 27 under which they were bound to have "due regard to all dangers of navigation & collision."—THE ALGOL, [1918] P. 7; 87 L. I am by no means prepared to deny that there may exist so peculiar a combination of circumstances as to render the adoption of this rule no longer fitting or expedient. These circumstances, however, should be of a strong & stringent nature; because it is obvious that if every man is to engraft upon it his own exceptions, according to his own views of convenience or advantage, the rule would soon degenerate into no rule at all (DR. The Undaunted was going down the river, close hauled; the steamer was coming up the river, with the wind free behind her. . . . The general rule under these circumstances would be, that the steamer should give way, & for this reason: the Undaunted was close hauled, & the Columbine was not only a steamer, but had the wind free or large. . . . If vessels are so approaching each other that there is a chance of collision, it is to be avoided by an adherence to the rule. . . . The Columbine has not made out any justification of her own conduct; neither the haziness of the night, nor the point from which the Undaunted was seen, was sufficient to justify the violation of the rule; & I repeat what I have said before that to these general rules & principles I am reluctant to admit of exceptions unless necessity calls for it (DR. A principle of law that you are not to adhere to strict rules of navigation, but avoid an accident if possible, is a doctrine, however, to be carefully watched. I do not mean to say that any vessel is justified in coming into collision with another if she can escape it, because common sense & common regard to property & life establish a universal principle, that no persons must wilfully come into collision with another vessel. It would be a dangerous doctrine to hold, without evidence, that [a vessel] whose duty it is to keep her course, ought to have deviated from that rule, & given way, where there are no circumstances established by evidence to show that she ought so to have done. I cannot conceive that anything would be more likely to lead to mischievous consequences, than to suppose that a vessel, whose duty it is to keep her course, should anticipate that another vessel will not give way, & so give way herself (DR. Article 14: "If two ships under steam are crossing, so as to involve risk of collision, the ship which has the other on her own starboard side shall keep out of the way of the other." 5447. Duty to avoid injury—Collision.]—If a vessel at sea is going close hauled to the wind, & another meeting her is going free, the rule of the sea is, for the latter vessel to go to leeward; & although such vessel may either go to leeward or windward as she best can, yet she ought, as a general rule, to suppose that the vessel going to windward will keep her position.

Although there may be a rule of the sea, yet a man who has the management of one ship is not to be allowed to follow that rule to the injury of the vessel of another, when he could avoid the injury by pursuing a different course. But if the matter comes into any doubt, as for instance in the case of a dark night, then we ought to look to the practice, as that which is to regulate the parties (BEST, C.J.).—HANDAYSYDE v. WILSON (1828), 3 C. & P. 528; 172 E. Where you can with perfect safety escape an accident by any manœuvre whatsoever, it is your duty to do it, but I wholly deny the danger would be averted or that infinitely greater danger would not occur if a vessel closely hauled on the larboard tack or descrying a steamer were to take upon herself to deviate from her course for the purpose of getting out of the way, because I am of opinion that by so doing it would lead to the chance of infinitely more collisions than take place at present (DR. 5456. —— Danger must be real & bonâ fide.]—(1) Two steamers came into collision in Halfway Reach in the Thames. Both to blame; one for not being on the side of the river directed by the statute, notwithstanding it appeared there was a usage for vessels to follow the course she took, the other for having one of her lights out, & for not having stopped & reversed her engines when she saw the other vessel, notwithstanding she had a right to expect that no steamer would be in that part of the river, & that if there should be one she would port her helm.

(2) The plea of usage, in opposition to the statute, can only be admitted so far as it goes to show that the usage leads to the safety of vessels. If the usage leads to the safety of vessels, it may be a ground for disobeying the statute under certain circumstances. But the danger must be real bonâ fide to justify a departure from the regulations of the statute.

If there is danger in following, in particular cases, the directions of the Legislature, that would be an adequate reason for not complying with them. But of what kind must the danger be if the safety consists in this, that you are safer in violating the law of the land than obeying it, because a great many other persons do it, & therefore it will avoid the chance of collision? Why, it is an argument that never can be listened to . . . in a Ct. of Justice, namely, that because other people violate the law, therefore, those who navigate the river Thames are at liberty so to do (DR. LUSHINGTON).

Supposing for want of means sufficient to navigate with safety,—suppose from the vicinity of shoals,—suppose from the state of the vessel, being disabled, she then seeks to take that course which the Legislature has prohibited—under such circumstances she would unquestionably be relieved from the punishment affixed by the Legislature (DR. LUSHINGTON).

This is said to be an established practice or custom, but in point of fact it only amounts to this, that according to common sense the one vessel steers her course where the tide is strongest in her favour, the other where the adverse tide is weakest. The crew of the W. immediately got on board the T., but some of them returned & found that the W. was injured, & was making water. The W. was built in watertight compartments, & the water did not reach her engines or fires. The T. lay by her for an hour, & then observing a French man of war approaching, hailed those on board the W., & they at once abandoned her, & the T. steamed away. The W. was approached by the French ship, & was seen by her afloat for three or four hours after the collision; the T. was found to blame for the collision, & the usual reference was made to the registrar & merchants to assess the damages, & they found that pltfs., the W., were only entitled to such sum as would have been required to repair the vessel if she had been taken to a place of safety, & to compensation for loss of contracts during the time of repair:—Held: the abandonment of the vessel was unjustifiable, & the master & crew had shown a want of ordinary nautical skill & courage in not attempting to save the W., & her owners were therefore only entitled to recover as for a partial loss.—THE THURINGIA (1872), 41 L. barge in tow of a tug steamer on the opposite side:—Held: the tug steamer & her tow were not to blame by reason of an alleged custom for ascending vessels to stop below the buoy for descending vessels to pass it first, & if there were such a custom it would afford no excuse for a descending steamer coming into collision if she could avoid it.—Re THE THAMES (1874), 2 S. 5485. —— —— Effect of assisting in spite of danger—Subsequent damage not connected with collision.]—Two steam vessels, the S. O. & the M., came into collision in a dense fog. The M. received very serious damage, the S. O. was damaged to a slight extent. The S. O. took off the crew of the M. & then endeavoured to save the M. by lashing herself alongside & towing towards shallower water inshore. While so proceeding the vessels grounded in the fog, whereby the S. O. received damage:—Held: (1) on the facts assistance could not be rendered "without danger" to the S. O., & accordingly the stranding damage could not be connected with the collision negligence on the ground that there was a statutory duty under 1894 Act, s. 422, on the master of the S. O. to render assistance to the M.; (2) the stranding damage was not the direct result of the negligence causing the collision; (3) the damage was too remote.—THE SAN ONOFRE, [1922] P. 243; 92 L. 5486. —— Duty to lower boats—Possible risk in standing by—Signals to other vessels insufficient.]—36 & 37 Vict., c. 85, s. 16, having imposed upon the master of every ship, in case of collision with another ship, a duty, "if & so far as he can do so without danger to his own vessel, crew, & passengers, if any, to stay by the other vessel until he has ascertained that she has no need of further assistance, & to render to the other vessel, her master, crew, & passengers, if any, such assistance as may be practicable & as may be necessary to save them from any danger caused by such collision," this duty is not discharged by a steamship, where, it being practicable & safe to lower a boat to render assistance, although possibly dangerous to stay by the injured ship, she continues her voyage without lowering her boat, & merely hails & signals for other vessels to go to the assistance of the injured ship.—THE ADRIATIC (1875), 33 L. T. 102; 3 Asp. M. L. C. 16.

5487. —— To reply to signals of distress.]—(1) A vessel which has been in collision with another is bound, in order to comply with 36 & 37 Vict., c. 85, s. 16, to answer signals made by the vessel with which she has been in collision, even where she is unable, owing to the damage she has herself sustained, to stand by the other ship.

To what ships applicable—Tug—Tow in collision.]—(1) A collision occurred between two vessels, A. & B. A. was in tow of a steam tug; the tug afterwards rendered assistance to B. B. was found solely to blame for the collision:—Held: the tug's right of salvage remuneration was not affected by Merchant Shipping (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 33, which makes it the duty of ships mutually to assist each other after a collision.

(2) In this case, indeed, the tug itself did not come into collision, but the ship which it towed; & it has been argued that the case of a towing ship is a casus omissus from the statute, but I am not of this opinion (SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE).—THE HANNIBAL, THE QUEEN (1867), L. 5489. —— Coble.]—An English steamer ran down a fishing coble off the coast; no injury ensued to the steamer or to any one on board of her, but the coble sank, & three of her crew were drowned. The master of the steamer was below, & the mate was in charge of the deck. The master came up soon after the collision, but neither the mate nor the master took any steps to save the men. An inquest was held on one of the bodies, & the Board of Trade instructed an attorney to attend & report upon it. He reported the result of the inquest, & sent the notes he had taken of the evidence given before the coroner. The Board of Trade directed that an investigation should be instituted, &, on the requisition of the solr. to the Board, two justices, assisted by two nautical assessors, held an inquiry. Before the inquiry notice was served on the master & mate of the steamer, that in pursuance of Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), & Merchant Shipping (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), the Board of Trade had directed an official inquiry into the collision (describing it), whereby loss of life ensued, & that the written paper annexed was the statement on which the Board had ordered the inquiry. The "statement" was a copy of the notes of some of the depositions taken at the inquest. The justices proceeded with the inquiry, after protest by the master & mate, & stated in open ct. that the ct. found that neither the mate, before the master came up, nor the master afterwards, rendered such assistance to the crew of the coble as was practicable without danger to their own ship or crew, & ordered their respective certificates to be suspended for three months. On a motion for a certiorari to bring up this order, the above facts were disclosed on affidavits; & it was further shown that the "coble" was a vessel employed in the herring fishery; it was twenty four feet long, seven feet beam, ten tons burthen, drawing about eighteen inches; it had about eight feet of deck forward, with a main & mizzen mast & a bowsprit to ship & unship, & a jib, mainsail, & mizzen sail. The masts were easily removable, & the vessel was fitted with four oars, to be used when occasion required, viz., in harbour or in shoal water, when the rudder, which projected several feet below the keel, had to be removed. Such vessels often went twenty miles out to sea, & were too heavy, when filled with wet nets & fish, to be moved by oars:—Held: (1) the coble was a "ship" within Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), & Merchant Shipping (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63); (2) the proceedings were valid & the justices had power to suspend the certificates under Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), ss. 241, 242, 432, 433, & Merchant Shipping (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), ss. 23, 33; (3) the copy of the depositions was a sufficient statement or report within Merchant Shipping (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 23; & (4) the mate before, & the master after he came on deck, were "in charge" within Merchant Shipping (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 33, which, in case of collision between two ships, makes it the duty of the person in charge of each ship to render such assistance as is practicable, without danger to his own ship & crew, to the crew of the other ship, & makes failure to do so a ground for cancelling or suspending his certificate; (5) "in charge" means not merely at the time of the collision, but at any time when life could have been saved (BLACKBURN, J.).—Ex p. FERGUSON (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 280; 40 L. J. Q. B. 105; 24 L. T. 96; 19 W. R. 746; 1 Asp. M. L. C. 8; sub nom. Re THAMES STEAMER, Ex p. FERGUSON, 35 J. P. 468.

"Person in charge"—Master.]—(1) By 25 & 26 Vict., c. 63, s. 33, in case of collision between two ships, it is the duty of the "person in charge" of each ship to render assistance to the other, & in case he fails to do so without reasonable excuse the collision shall, in absence of proof to the contrary, be deemed to have been caused by his wrongful act:—Held: the "person in charge" intended by Merchant Shipping (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 33, is the master.

(2) Two steamships, the Q. & the R., each under the charge of a compulsory pilot, came into collision in the Thames. The Q. was solely to blame, & after the collision she rendered no assistance to the R., & showed no excuse for having failed to do so:—Held: the mere fact of her having a pilot on board did not exempt her owners from liability. (3) Semble: if the collision had been caused solely by the neglect of the pilot on board the Q., the subsequent misconduct of the master in not rendering assistance would not have made her owners liable for the collision.—THE QUEEN (1869), L. 5505. Obedience must be in time to prevent collision.]—In a case of collision between a steamship & sailing vessel, occasioned by the fault of the steamship, it was proved that the sailing vessel had failed to comply with the Admlty. regulations regarding lights, having either shown no lights, as she was bound, or if she had any lights, that the lights could not be seen till the collision was too imminent for prevention. The Judicial Committee reversed the decision of the Admlty Ct., being of opinion that the collision might have been avoided if the sailing vessel had obeyed the Admlty. Regulations, & that though the omission to exhibit proper lights might be immaterial where it is clearly shown that the absence of such lights was not the cause of the collision, & did not conduce to it, yet that where it is proved that a vessel has not shown proper lights, the onus lies on such vessel to show that the non-compliance with the Regulation was not the cause of the collision, which the sailing vessel failed to do; the general rule being, that a vessel must not only obey the Admlty. Regulations as regards lights, but must obey them in time to prevent an impending collision.—THE FENHAM (1870), L. R. 3 P. C. 212; 6 Moo. P. C. C. N. S. 501; 23 L. T. 329; 3 Mar. L. C. 484; 16 E. course which of itself would suffice to produce the collision.

(3) A manœuvre made too late to affect the collision, does not make the ship liable as having contributed to the collision, even if the manœuvre was erroneous.

(4) Where a steamship is approaching a sailing ship, & does not know what course the other ship is pursuing, it is her duty, whether the lights of the other vessel are visible or not, to take no decisive movement until she can ascertain it.

(5) The law does not appoint any particular place at which the lights should be fixed, but they ought to be placed so as to be properly visible. Semble: the fact that the lights of one ship are invisible to the other does not make the former ship contributory when the course pursued by the latter is not in itself prudent & judicious. —BEAL v. MARCHAIS, THE BOUGAINVILLE & THE JAMES C. (2) It also appeared that the stern light of pltfs.' vessel was placed on deck abaft a house on the after part of the deck:—Held: this was an infringement of rule 5 of the Mersey Rules, but the ct. having regard to the position of pltfs.' & defts.' vessels, held that the infringement could not have contributed to the collision.—THE FIRE QUEEN (1887), 12 P. 5536. Necessity for—Lights visible at one mile only.]—(1) A ship carrying side lights which are visible only at the distance of about a mile, instead of at a distance of two miles, as required by the regulations, infringed those regulations so as to make her liable to be deemed in fault under the statute. Semble: a ship carrying such lights must be deemed in fault, whether the deficiency of the light did or did not contribute to the collision.

(2) Semble: where lights are so fixed that they are partly obscured from a particular point right ahead by the catheads of a ship carrying them, but are visible both above & below the catheads, there is no such infringement within the statute as will render the ship liable in a collision with another ship approaching broad on the starboard bow of the former.

(3) The regulation as to the length of the screens of the ship's side lights, being for the purpose of preventing those lights from being seen across the bows of the ship carrying them, & being merely subsidiary for the purpose of securing the visibility of each distinct light, a ship carrying screens shorter than these required by the regulations, is not guilty of any infringement within Merchant Shipping Act, 1913 (c. 85), if the lights are not in fact seen across her bows, & it is shown that by reason of the construction of the ship, she could not have carried larger screens with safety.

(4) A steamer seeing lights close ahead of her, carried by some ship, & being unable to make out those lights, or the course of the ship carrying them, should slacken speed until she is able to ascertain the meaning of the lights, & so be able to avoid the vessel carrying them.

(5) It may be convenient to say a word on the legal effect of instructions given by the Board of Trade to their surveyors. . . . d. Necessity for—Crib light with visibility of two & one half to three miles.]—An ordinary cold blast lantern with a visibility of about two & one half to three miles was held not to be a sufficient crib light, as such would not convey that "reasonable intimation of the true state of affairs" necessary as a matter of good seamanship & safe navigation. carried by one of the vessels were so fixed as to be partially obscured, & that there was therefore an infringement of Article 6 of the Regulations:—Held: in the circumstances, it was the duty of the ct. to inquire into the facts in order to ascertain whether the infringement of the Regulations could possibly have contributed to the collision, &, inasmuch as it appeared from inquiry into the relative positions of the two vessels that the obscuration of the lights could not possibly have caused the accident, the vessel carrying such lights was not to blame.

A vessel coming end on to another vessel has a right to have the whole value of the light continuously in sight during the time she is called upon to act, & if therefore a vessel were coming end on, or anything like end on, towards this ship, the Vandalia, the question would not be whether the partial obscuration of the light, even for that time, & to that extent, would prevent her from seeing it. The question would be whether it might not prevent her seeing it during some of the time during which she would act, & so have an effect on her conduct (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—THE DUKE OF BUCCLEUCH (1889), 15 P. 5540. —— —— Position altered owing to rough weather.]—Where in a case of collision between ships, it is proved that the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea have been infringed by one of the ships, & that such infringement might possibly have caused or contributed to the collision, the ship guilty of such infringement will be held to blame, unless it is shown to the satisfaction of the ct. that the circumstances of the case made a departure from the regulations necessary.

A brig of 239 tons, beating to windward on the starboard tack at night, encountered such rough weather as to render it justifiable in the opinion of the ct. that her side lights should be removed from the place where they were usually carried in the fore part of the vessel to the after part near the traffrail, & the lights were so removed. In this latter position the lights were obscured to the extent of a point, or a point & a half, on either bow. The brig came into collision with a barque on the opposite tack:—Held: the circumstances of the case did not justify the brig in carrying the lights so as to be obscured as above-mentioned & the brig must be deemed to be in fault under 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 17.—THE TIRZAH (1878), 4 P. 5541. —— Lights occasionally obscured—By sail.]—Where a ship carried a bright light of such a character as to be visible at 3 miles distance, which though fixed in the rigging was not shown to have been intercepted by the clew of the fore-sail or otherwise:—Held: there was no breach of Maritime Regulations, Articles 3 (b) & 5 of sect. 3, & therefore no presumption of culpability on the part of such ship, as contributing to the collision in respect of which she sued.

Even if it could be held that an occasional obscuration of light by the sail under exceptional circumstances was a breach of the regulation, the evidence in this case is to the effect that there never could be any interference at all by the sail with the lamp; that therefore there was no breach of the Regulation (LORD HOBHOUSE).—THE GLAMORGANSHIRE (1888), 13 App. Cas. 454; 59 L. 5542. —— Improper lights.]—A steamer, the S. G., making 16 knots, collided with a sailing vessel, the C. Q., at night. The night was "fine, clear, dark & overcast." The lighting of C. Q. was a gross infringement of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea. Those on board the S. G. did not see the loom of the C. Q. until they were within about 300 feet of her. The Assessors expressed the opinion that in the circumstances it was very doubtful whether the loom of the C. Q. could have been seen at a distance of a quarter of a mile, or at a distance appreciably greater than that at which it was first seen by the S. G.:—Held: the C. Q. was to blame for carrying improper light, & she was alone to blame for the collision. It had not been proved that the lookout on the S. G. was in any way defective.—THE CUMBERLAND QUEEN (1921), 126 L. T. 679; 15 Asp. M. L. C. 483, C. A.

5548. —— Mersey Rules, 1900, Article 4 (a).]—Pltfs.' steam vessel was lying at anchor in the river Mersey waiting to dock, &, as her engines were broken down, she had a tug fast alongside to hold her up against the flood tide in the event of her anchor dragging. Defts.' steam vessel coming up the river ran into pltfs.' vessel, & was found to blame for bad look out; but pltfs.' vessel was also found to blame on the ground that the tug was, at the material time, exhibiting misleading, namely, under way, instead of towing, lights:—Held: (1) as the tug was "attached for the purpose of towing or manœuvring" pltfs.' vessel within the meaning of Article 4 (a) of the Mersey Rules, 1900, she should have exhibited the towing lights prescribed by Article 3 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897. (2) As the misleading lights exhibited by the tug might by possibility have contributed to the collision, pltfs.' vessel was to "be deemed to be in fault," for the word "ship" in the clause "the ship by which the regulation has been infringed," in 1894 Act, s. 419 (4), must be construed to mean pltfs.' vessel, the master of which, though in a position to exercise control, had improperly neglected to prevent the tug infringing the regulation.—THE DEVONIAN, [1901] P. 221; 70 L. ### (g) "Not under Command."

See Sea Regulations, 1910; Statutory Rules & Orders, 1910, p. 457, Article 4.

5551. What amounts to—Altogether unable "to get out of the way."]—(1) By Article 5 of the Regulations of 1884 for Preventing Collisions at Sea, sub-sect. (a), a steamship, "which from any accident is not under command shall at night carry," in place of the white light, "three red lights in globular lanterns." By sub-sect. (c) such a steamship, "when making way" through the water, shall carry the side lights. By sub-sect. (d) the lights "required to be shown by this Article are to be taken by other ships as signals that the ship showing them is not under command, & cannot therefore get out of the way."

Owing to an accident to her machinery, the speed of a steamship was reduced from 11 knots to between 4 & 5 knots. She was able to steer, but could not reverse & go astern as quickly as before. She hoisted three red lights in place of the white light & went ahead; but it was found as a fact both in the Admlty. Div. & in the Ct. of Appeal that she did not exhibit her red side light till the moment when she came into collision with another vessel. The cts. below held that she thus misled the other vessel into the belief that she was stationary, & so caused the collision:—Held: as it could not be clearly shown that the finding of fact as to the red side light was erroneous, this House would not disturb it.

(2) This ship being able to make way at between 4 & 5 knots, to steer, & to stop & reverse, though less quickly than before, & the danger of the machinery ceasing to work at any moment not bring imminent, the ship could not properly be said to be "not under command" within the meaning of the regulations.

Construing the Article as a whole, it is certain that a vessel may not be under command within the meaning of those words as used in the Article, & yet the making way through the water; for it is provided that, if making way through the water, a vessel shall carry the ordinary side lights as well as the three red lights at her masthead (LORD HERSCHELL, C.).

I desire to say that I do not think that because the rule contemplates that a vessel not under command may be justified in making way through the water, it therefore implies that a vessel in so disabled a condition is always justified in continuing so to make way (LORD HERSCHELL, C.).

Suppose the vessel, though having steerage way on her & capable of being steered to port or starboard, yet, owing to some disablement, answered her helm but very slowly, so that if an occasion for doing so should arise she could not get out of the way of another vessel in the manner which such vessel would have reason to anticipate. Suppose, though she can stop & reverse, she can only do so after great & unusual delay, I am not satisfied that in either of these cases she might not be properly described as not under command. . . . Again, suppose that, owing to a breakdown of the machinery, its ceasing to be capable of propelling the vessel is reasonably regarded as imminent & likely to occur at any moment, I am not satisfied that in this case a vessel may not properly be said, within the meaning of the rule, not to be under command (LORD HERSCHELL, C.).—P. At sunset she took down the three black balls she had hoisted, & exhibited an anchor light forward, & a globular white light aft. A sailing vessel also proceeding down channel, & heading about S.S.E., closehauled on the starboard tack, mistook the lights for the masthead & green of a steamer in motion, &, expecting the steamer to give way, kept on her course. A collision occurred: —Held: the steamer was alone to blame, as the lights she exhibited were calculated to mislead, so that the mistake on the part of the sailing vessel was excusable. g. Engaged in trawling—Stationary—Going quarter of a knot with trawl down.]—The word "stationary" in art. 9 of Rules concerning Lights in Council of June 24, 1885, a British sailing trawler in the North Sea, having her trawl in the water, & carrying the prescribed white light, is to be supplied with red pyrotechnic lights, & shall show "one of the red pyrotechnic lights . . . on being approached by another . . . vessel in sufficient time to prevent collision."

Sect. 3.—The sea regulations: Sub-sect. 5, B. (i) & (k).]

A British sailing trawler in the North Sea, with her trawl in the water, & carrying the prescribed white light, did not show a red pyrotechnic light to an approaching vessel until there was risk of collision by that vessel suddenly shutting in her red, & showing her green light, on the trawler's port bow at the distance of one-third of a mile:—Held: the trawler had complied with the regulations for the rule did not mean that it was necessary to show the pyrotechnic light under all circumstances when a trawler was being approached by another vessel, but that the duty was thrown upon the trawler of showing the pyrotechnic light in time to prevent collision when a vessel was approaching under such circumstances that there exists a risk of collision.—THE ORION, [1891] P. 307; 60 L. J. P. 90; 65 L. T. 500; 7 Asp. M. L. C. 88.

5574. —— —— ——.]—A steamship proceeding about midnight, at a speed of nearly 9 knots, through a fleet of vessels fishing off the north coast of Cornwall, ran down & sank one of them, which had her regulation white fishing light up, & was, at the material time, lying hove to, engaged in hauling in her trawl. The lights of the steamship were first observed at some considerable distance, & when it was noticed by those on board the trawler that the steamship was heading for them, a white flare up light was shown where it could best be seen, the distance between the two vessels being than about 300 yards:—Held: (1) the steamship was alone to blame for not keeping out of the way; (2) the flare was shown "in sufficient time to prevent collision" within Article 9, 1906 (d), sub-sect. 2, of the regulations for preventing collisions at sea.—THE PICTON, [1910] P. 46; 79 L. J. P. 53; 101 L. T. 917; 11 Asp. M. L. C. 358.

5575. Engaged in trawling—Trawl down—Position similar to that of anchored vessel.]—THE GOOD INTENT v. THE NAPOLEON THIRD (1856), 6 L. T. 615.

5576. —— —— ——.]—(1) A steam trawler, whilst engaged in trawling at the rate of 2½ knots an hour through the water & 4½ knots an hour over the ground, carrying a single white light, was run down by the D.; it being admitted that the D. was to blame, the question arose whether the trawler was not also to blame, for not carrying side lights:—Held: though the trawler was one of a class of vessels within Article 9 of the Regulations of 1863, she, in order to be "stationary" within the meaning of that article, was bound not to go faster than was necessary to keep herself under command whilst fishing, & as her speed was greater than was necessary for so doing, she was, at the time of the collision, within Article 3 of the Regulations of 1880.

(2) That leads me to the construction of this rule. My view of an Act of Parliament—& this article is equivalent to an Act of Parliament—which is made applicable to a large trade or business is, that it should be construed, if possible, not according to the strictest & nicest interpretation of language, but according to a reasonable & business interpretation of it (BRETT, M.R.).

(3) To my mind the phrase "fishing vessels attached to their nets & stationary" is meant to be applicable to a time when the vessels are fishing, because everybody knows when vessels are fishing they are attached to their nets; still they are not under way . . . they are much more like vessels which are at anchor than they are like vessels which are under way . . . they are in an extremely helpless state; & if they attempt any manœuvres cannot properly execute them (BRETT, M.R.).

(4) We are bound to give the fullest effect to so strong a word as "stationary" (BRETT, M.R.).

(5) "Being at anchor" is a nautical phrase which everybody understands. It is not necessary that an anchor should be down; for instance, a vessel made fast to moorings has no anchor of her own, & those moorings may not be fastened by an anchor but by something else equivalent to an anchor; yet every one would say she was at anchor; or fishing boats—I have known fishing boats brought up by dropping overboard an exceedingly heavy stone (BRETT, M.R.).—THE DUNELM (1884), 9 P. The trawler had been getting her trawl in, &, having got it in just before the collision & not keeping a good look out, went full speed across the bows of the sailing vessel, which kept her course:—Held: the trawler was to blame, not only for a bad look out, but also because when she went full speed ahead she was under command, & it was her duty to keep out of the way of the sailing vessel, & because, when she was under command & in a position to go full speed ahead, she ought to have shifted her lights & put up the ordinary lights for a steam vessel under way; & the sailing vrssel was right in keeping her course.—THE UPTON CASTLE, [1906] P. 147; 75 L. 5584. —— After getting in gear.] — THE UPTON CASTLE, No. 5581, ante.

5585. ———— Preparatory to reshooting trawl.] —A steam drifter was fishing in the North Sea with over 2,000 yards of gear out, & was exhibiting the two white lights prescribed by Article 9 (b), of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, for vessels " fishing with drift nets," when those in charge observed, upwards of a mile away a vessel which they thought was entangle in their gear. They thereupon cast off & buoyed the nets, & steamed up to the other vessel, but so negligently manœuvred their own vessel that she was sunk in collision. The other vessel, which proved to be a steam trawler, had, prior to the collision, been trawling in one direction for an hour, then in the opposite direction for an hour, & then turned again, shooting, & hauling in her trawl in the usual way, & all the time carrying the tri-coloured lantern required by (d) of the same Article, for steam vessels " when engaged in trawling." On the question of lights :—Held : the drifter had infringed the regulations, for, when she left her nets, she should have taken in her fishing lights & exhibited the lights indicated by the first paragraph of Article 9 for vessels " under way " ; whilst the steam trawler had rightly exhibited the triplex light the whole time, for she was to be deemed to be trawling, not only when she had her trawl down, but during the interval between hauling it up & shooting it again, though if she hauled up her trawl, & instead of shooting it at once, steamed off to trawl over some other ground, it would then become necessary for her to exhibit " under way " lights.—THE COCKATRICE, [1908] P. 182 ; 77 L. J. P. 74 ; 98 L. T. 728 ; 24 T. L. R. 339 ; 11 Asp. M. L. C. 50.

5586. —— —— Going ahead.]—Pltfs.' trawling smack was carrying the proper lights for a sailing trawler with her trawl down, & having got her trawl up she hoisted her foresail, with the result that before again shooting her trawl she was making 1½ to 2 knots. A collision took place during this interval, between the trawler & defts.' steamer :—Held : both vessels were to blame, as the trawler ought to have had her sailing lights up & the steamer ought to have kept out of the way in view of the lights which the trawler was exhibiting.—THE SKRIM (1914), 30 T. L. R. 555.

5590. Meaning of " being overtaken "—Vessel hove to.]—THE NOSTRE PADRE (1880), Pritchard's Admiralty Dig. 3rd ed. p. 244.

5591. ——.]—(1) A ship is " being overtaken " within the meaning of Article 11 when another is going faster than, & is coming nearer to, her on a course which may ultimately lead to a position of danger, & where the following ship is within the space not covered by the lights of the first ship, & is thus in a position in which these lights cannot be seen by those on board the following ship.

(2) The light prescribed in Article 11 must be shown within a reasonable time before the overtaking ship gets into a position of danger, & after the overtaken ship has become aware that the overtaking ship is approaching in the manner before stated.

(3) The definition in The Franconia, No. 6118, post, that if the ships are in such a position, on such a course, & at such a distance, that if it were night the hinder ship could not see any part of the side lights of, & is going faster than, the forward ship, they cannot be said to be crossing ships, but that the hinder one is an overtaking ship, is though not exhaustive, yet a good working definition (LORD HERSCHELL, C.).

(4) The object of this rule is, that where a vessel was able to see, & ought to have seen, that another vessel was approaching her, going faster than she was, coming nearer to her, & being on such a course as might ultimately lead to a position of danger, & yet not being in a position to see the lights of the vessel ahead of her, that then the obligation is on the vessel being overtaken in this sense to show from her stern a white light or a flare-up (LORD HERSCHELL, C.).—THE MAIN (1886), 11 P. By Article 11 " a ship which is being overtaken by another shall show from her stern to such last-mentioned ship a white light or a flare-up light " :—Held : it is a breach of the above Regulations for a vessel when no other vessel overtaking it is in sight to carry a white light permanently fixed upon its stern.

(2) The white light required by Article 11 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea to be shown from the stern of a vessel overtaken by another vessel must be such as will secure the object of that article, i.e., as will indicate to the overtaking vessel the position of the overtaken vessel on which it is exhibited.—THE PATROCLUS (1888), 13 P. 5617. Duty to extinguish side light—Immediately ship brought up.]—The master of pltfs.' steamship proceeding, about 7 p.m. in Nov., up Barking Reach, in the Thames, with a flood tide of about half a knot, decided to anchor on account of fog. He stopped his engines, put his helm hard-a-port, &, having given the vessel an angle across the river to the northward, set his engines slow ahead, & then full speed astern. When the way was taken off his ship he let go to the anchor, &, on a hail from the mate that the anchor was holding ordered the two side lights & the masthead light to be taken in, & the riding light to be put up, leaving a stern light, showing twenty points still exhibited. The fog during this time had lifted, & defts.' steamship coming down the river seeing the masthead & red light of pltf.'s ship a little on the port bow, ported. The red light then disappeared & pltfs.' steamship was seen to be lying across the river, whereupon the engines of defts.' ship were reversed full speed, but a collision occurred:—Held: pltfs.' steamship was alone to blame, as, when throwing herself athwart the navigable channel & stopping her way she was within Thames Bye-Laws, 1887, Article 18, & was bound to give four or more blasts of the steam whistle in rapid succession, so long as the danger lasted, that is, until she had swung to her anchor. The side lights ought also to have been taken in as soon as the vessel was held by her anchor, &, being over 150 feet in length, the second riding light prescribed by Thames Bye-Laws, 1892, Article 7 (c), should have been duly exhibited at or near the stern.—THE WEGA, [1895] P. 156; 64 L. 5625. —— Jackstaff six feet above deck—Ensign staff five feet above deck—Torpedo boat destroyer.]—A torpedo boat destroyer, over 150 feet in length, was lying at anchor in a harbour at night with her forward riding light on the jackstaff 6 feet above the deck, & her after light on the ensign staff 5 feet above the deck. There were no masts in the vessel upon which lights could be placed in the positions prescribed by Article 1,069 of the King's Regulations, which was the same as Article 11 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897. She had an awning up, which was about 3 feet higher than the after light. Another vessel coming down the harbour saw only one light, & thinking that the vessel carrying the light was less than 150 feet in length, she came into collision with her. If the destroyer had not exceeded 150 feet in length, the other vessel would have passed clear. In an action by the Admlty. to recover the amount of the damage, the judge found that the awning of the Haughty obscured the after light, & that this was the cause of the collision, & that therefore the other vessel was not to blame for the collision, & he gave judgment for defts.:—Held: there was evidence upon which the judge could so find, & as pltfs. had not proved that the collision was caused by the negligence of defts., the judgment must be affirmed.—THE HIRONDELLE (1905), 22 T. 5627. " Aground in or near fairway "—Vessel dragging through mud.]—Just before sunrise, but in daylight, & in the shallow water of Monte Video Roads, pltfs.' & defts.' steamships were, at the material time, crossing vessels within the meaning of article 19 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea. Pltfs.' vessel was pursuing a southerly course at about three knots, & had defts.' vessel on her starboard bow at about right angles. As the giving way vessel, pltfs.' vessel ported to pass under the stern of defts.' vessel, but struck her on the port quarter, & was held to blame for not taking sufficient or timely steps to avoid collision. Defts.' vessel, of deeper draught, was slowly dragging through the mud on an easterly course at about one mile per hour, & to assist in her progress, she was, from time to time, putting her engines full speed astern, the last occasion being for the first three out of the eight minutes preceding the collision:—Held: (1) defts.' vessel was free from blame, as she was not bound to exhibit two red lights under articles 4 or 11, being neither " not under command " nor " aground " within the meaning of those articles; (2) she was not under any obligation to give the three short blast signal on putting her engines full speed astern, as she was so manœuvring with her engines, from time to time, in the ordinary course of navigation to enable her to go ahead as fast as the condition of the mud would permit, & was not, within the meaning of article 28, taking a course " authorised or required by these rules," with reference to the other vessel in sight.

It is true that Article 28 refers to the signals being given when vessels are in sight of one another, but the words immediately following, " in taking any course authorised or required by these rules," show that it does not mean in sight at any distance, but in sight with reference to the manœuvres which a vessel is authorised or required to take, having regard to the other vessel approaching, for the purpose of avoiding collision (LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J.).

I think, as a matter of fact, that there was no point prior to the time at which the offending vessel, the Canning, reached the buoys, at which there was anything which, under Article 28, called for a signal from the Bellanoch; indeed, I would go so far, & I have the support of a judge of very great experience, the President of the Admlty. Div., as to say that I think it would have been a wrong thing, because misleading (KENNEDY, L.J.).

What they mean to allege as a ground of complaint is that the Bellanoch, after she was port to port, & when the period of action, & duty of signalling the action, under the rules had arisen, moved her engines astern without giving the signal under article 28. I understand, looking at the pleadings & the evidence, that that was the case which they came to fight, & upon which they would have had real ground of complaint had their evidence been deemed truthful, & had it been believed by the ct. that the Bellanoch did then go astern (KENNEDY, L.J.).—THE BELLANOCH, [1907] P. 170; 76 L. the mistaken impression that the liner was starboarding, starboarded their helm, thereby bringing their vessel across the bows of the liner, &, at the last, ported to throw their quarter clear. Those in charge of the liner stopped, then blew one short blast & ported, at the same time reversing the starboard engine, & subsequently also the port engine; but the two vessels came into collision, the liner striking the cruiser on the starboard side amidships & sinking her. In the ct. below, the cruiser was found alone to blame for improper starboarding. On appeal it was contended that the liner was also to blame for excessive speed in the condition of the weather, & for failure to indicate her position by sound signals:—Held: both charges against the liner failed, for, though good seamanship required that she should be going at a speed which would be moderate when she herself was enveloped in falling snow, her speed at the material time, & in the weather conditions then prevailing, was not excessive; &, though good seamanship would suggest to those in charge of the liner the advisability, as in the analogous case of fog, of giving warning of the presence of their vessel by sounding the signal when approaching falling snow, yet as both vessels saw one another at a distance & in sufficient time to enable them, with reasonable care, to pass each other in safety, the absence of sound signals on the part of the liner did not contribute to the collision.

Qu.: whether, when the liner was approaching falling snow, the responsibility for giving sound signals rested with the master or with the pilot in charge by compulsion of law.

It might be the duty of the master to call the attention of the pilot to the fact that sound signals ought to be given (LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J.).—THE ST. PAUL, [1909] P. 43; 78 L. J. P. 1; 100 L. T. 184; 11 Asp. M. L. C. 169, C. A.

5650. Use of bell—Foghorn not audible further than bell.]—(1) A steamer, going at the rate of 7 knots an hour, ran into a barque. The collision occurred in the Atlantic Ocean, in the direct line to New York, about 200 miles to the east of Sandy Hook. There was at the time a thick fog, & the barque was not seen till within a ship's length of the steamer. The barque, though hove to, was making headway at the rate of about a mile an hour. A bell was frequently sounded on board the barque, but no foghorn was used:—Held: the steamer was alone to blame for the collision, because she was going at an improper rate of speed, & because wrong & contradictory orders were given after the barque was sighted.

(2) The rate of speed proper for a steamer must depend on circumstances, but in a thick fog & at a part of the ocean where frequently a great number of vessels are congregated 7 knots an hour is too great.

(3) The barque was wrong in not using a foghorn, as required by the Admiralty Regulations; but, though a foghorn would have been heard farther than a bell, yet the neglect to use a foghorn was not the cause of the vessels coming into the position which caused the collision.—NATIONAL S.S. The foghorn was duly sounded before the collision, & was heard by those on board the steamship, & those on board the steamship neglected, for some time after they heard the foghorn, to stop or reverse the engines. The steamship was held to blame:—Held: (1) the barque was to be deemed in fault for not using a foghorn, to be sounded by mechanical means, as required by Article 12 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1879. (2) The circumstance that the barque left port a few days before the Regulations came into force did not afford any valid excuse for the neglect of those in charge of her to furnish her with a foghorn, to be sounded by mechanical means, they well knowing, before she left port, that the Regulations would come into force in a few days, & there being no evidence to show that they could not have obtained a foghorn, according to the Regulations, before she left port.—THE LOVE BIRD (1881), 6 P. COOGEE (1904), 29 V. L. R. 874.—AUS.

5654. Whether evidence of negligence—Against approaching ship.]—(1) A collision happened between the steamship I. and the barque Z. in a fog. It was proved that the I. had reduced her speed so far as was possible without stopping her way altogether:—Held: she had not infringed Article 13 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea.

(2) It was further proved that the Z. was proceeding at more than 4 knots an hour:—Held: an infringement of Article 13, for the term "moderate speed" means that a vessel is to reduce her speed so far as she can consistently with keeping steerage way.

(3) It was the duty of both vessels, under Article 13, to go at a moderate speed, & it appears to me that the object with which that rule of conduct is imposed is, not merely that vessels should go at a speed which will lessen the violence of a collision, but also that they should go at a speed which will give as much time as possible for the making any proper manœuvres which may become necessary under unforeseen circumstances; for, in a fog, it cannot be told exactly from what quarter the danger may come (SIR JAMES HANNEN, P.).

(4) It was further proved that a foghorn was blown on the Z. but not heard on the I.:—Held: this was not primâ facie evidence of negligence of those on the I.

(5) I do not consider that the fact of those on board the Iduna not hearing a foghorn proves that no foghorn was blown (SIR JAMES HANNEN, P.).

(6) Where a sailing ship in a fog hears repeated whistles of an approaching steamship, indicating possible risk of collision, she is bound to take precautions, such as stationing men at the braces ready to put the sails aback, so as to stop her way in the event of a collision becoming imminent.—THE ZADOK (1883), 9 P. 5655. —— ——.]—The evidence showed that the two vessels, the Cascapedia & the Alaska, were approaching the Oxfordshire & were both whistling regularly . . . once a minute. The Oxfordshire was approaching them & . . . those on board of her must have heard the whistle before they saw the lights of the Cascapedia. The Oxfordshire was therefore to blame in not stopping & reversing earlier than she did. . . . It was plain that the evidence of the Cascapedia as to stopping & reversing was erroneous, since the blow struck was too violent to be consistent with such a state of things. Both vessels were in a most frequented part of the sea, & they ought both to have prepared to take the greatest precautions. The degree of slowness to be adopted in a fog often depended on the place in which vessels were. It was, however, plain from the evidence of the Alaska, which was entirely to be believed, that the Oxfordshire was careless in not hearing the whistle sooner, & it was also plain that the Cascapedia had not reversed in time. Both vessels were therefore to blame & there would be no costs (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—THE CASCAPEDIA (1888), 4 T. L. R. 546, C. A.

J. P. 106; 100 L. T. 1007; 11 Asp. M. L. C. 283.

5658. —— Against ship claiming to have signalled.]—THE ZADOK, No. 5654, ante.

5659. ——.]—(1) A large twin screw mail & passenger steamer vessel was proceeding up the St. George's Channel in a dense fog at 9 to 10 knots an hour, her full speed being 21 knots, when she sighted a barque about 150 feet ahead, &, in spite of efforts to avoid her, struck her amidships, cutting her in two, with the loss of eleven lives. It was contended on behalf of the owners of the steam vessel that the speed at which she was travelling was moderate in the existing circumstances & conditions, as that speed was the lowest at which she could be readily manœuvred so as to avoid other vessels, & unless she was kept steaming continuously at about that speed she could not be navigated with safety to herself as there would be danger from uncertainty both in respect of her course and position:—Held: the speed was not "moderate" within Article 16 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, as the terms of that Article are imperative, &, as a general rule, speed such that another vessel cannot, after being seen, be avoided, is excessive.

(2) If a steam vessel cannot in a fog be continuously navigated at a very slow speed she must, in order to comply with the rule, & in the absence of exceptional dangers of navigation such as may arise from narrow waters or current, be stopped from time to time so as to take off her way. This may involve some inconvenience in the shape of delay, & possibly render it necessary to haul out from the coast, besides requiring proper steps to be taken to verify the position of the vessel, but it gives more opportunity of hearing the sound signals of an approaching vessel, more time to act when necessary, & if a collision should occur, the consequences are less disastrous.

(3) The fact that the sound of the fog horn does not appear to have reached the ears of those on board the Campania is not sufficient to override the positive evidence of the witnesses from the barque that it was being properly sounded (GORELL BARNES, J.).—THE CAMPANIA, [1901] P. 289; 70 L. rung a bell alternately at intervals of not more than two minutes.

(2) The steamship colliding with the trawler had heard the whistle of another vessel, not the trawler, & had not stopped:—Held: there was no obligation on the steamship to stop, for whether the whistle proceeded from the trawler or not, it was heard abaft the beam.

(3) Semble: the steamship would have been held to blame for not stopping if the whistle heard had been forward of the beam, even though the whistle heard did not proceed from the vessel collided with.

(4) If a vessel is not whistling according to the rule it is very difficult for her to argue that it did not matter, because even if it had been sounded properly it would not have been heard. During a fog a collision occurred between the Brasilia & the Matiana. The Matiana had admitted that she was to blame, but contended that the Brasilia was also to blame by reason of the fact that shortly before the collision, & while she had way on her, she had sounded two blasts:—Held: the Brasilia by sounding two blasts had committed a breach of Article 15 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea & having thereby misled the Matiana as to her position, was also to blame.—THE MATIANA (1908), 25 T. 5665. —— Custom of Mersey Ferry—Whether breach of regulations.]—In a dense fog one of the Mersey ferry steamers crossing from Woodside to Liverpool came into collision with a tug towing a number of flats up the river. There was a 3 knot flood tide, & to overcome it & make her way across & down the river the ferry steamer was making about 4 knots. Instead of sounding the signal of one prolonged blast as prescribed by Article 15 (a) of the Sea Regulations, she was sounding a fog signal of two moderately long blasts, & the evidence established that it was the practice of the ferry steamers to sound special signals according to the particular ferry course they were on, & that this practice was well known on the river.

The tug was held to blame for proceeding up on the wrong side of the river, & it was contended that the ferry steamer was also to blame (inter alia), for not sounding her whistle in accordance with the Sea Regulations, for excessive speed, & for being under way at all:—Held: (1) although on the facts it did not contribute to the collision the sounding of the two long blasts was a breach of the Sea Regulations; (2) the ferry steamer must be held to blame for excessive speed; (3) although in the circumstances it may have been improper for her to be under way, inasmuch as to counteract the tide she had to go at a speed which was excessive, the ct. was not prepared to lay down any rule of law that ferry steamers should cease running in a dense fog.—THE TRANMERE, [1920] P. 454; 90 L. Defts. admitted at the trial that they were to blame:—Held: pltfs. were also to blame, for they had infringed Article 18, by going on at the same speed after they heard the first whistle as before.

(2) If an officer in charge of a vessel in a fog hears a whistle ahead, he must act sooner than if it is heard from any other quarter, & on the probability that the vessel which is sounding the whistle is coming towards him. The officer in charge of the pltfs.' steamer, on hearing the first whistle, should have reduced her speed to as slow a rate as possible, only keeping her under command (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

Dependent on locality—& handiness of ship.]—What is a "moderate speed" for a sailing ship in a fog, in accordance with Article 13 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1879, depends on the place where the ship happens to be, &, semble, her handiness, & is not necessarily proportioned to or less than the maximum speed she can make under the circumstances.

A speed of about five knots, in the case of a sailing ship out in the Atlantic Ocean, is a "moderate speed" & in compliance with this rule, the sailing ship being at the time under all plain sail, & going as fast as she can with the wind on her quarter.

Immediately before the collision the steamer was proceeding S.W.b.S. at the rate of 8 or 9 knots, & approaching a bank of fog, in which the sailing ship was, but did not sound her whistle, or reduce her speed. The sailing vessel, a barque, was heading N.N.W. with a moderate south easterly breeze of force between 3 & 4, &, under all plain sail, except her mainsail, spanker, & light sails, was making about 4 knots an hour. In an action of damage by collision:—Held: (1) the steamer was to blame for excessive speed, &, though it was not an infraction of the terms of Articles 12 (a), 13, she ought as a matter of precaution to have whistled on approaching the fog, & also to have reduced her speed; (2) the sailing vessel had not infringed Article 13 as, considering the locality, she was not proceeding at a rate of speed beyond what was necessary to keep her well under command.—THE N. 5731. Object of Regulation—Easier to ascertain position.]—(1) A British & a Dutch steam vessel came into collision, during a dense fog, in the English Channel 6 miles off Dungeness. The owners of the British vessel admitted liability for an infringement of the Collision Regulations; but the owners of the Dutch vessel denied liability on the ground (inter alia) that though the whistle of the other vessel was heard forward of the beam, their vessel was going so slow, & the fog signal so far off, that their master thought it better to wait, before stopping his engines, until he heard the whistle again:—Held: the Dutch vessel was to blame for not stopping, which omission in fact contributed to the collision, & no circumstances had been shown for disobeying the positive direction contained in Article 16, para. 2, of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, that "a steam vessel hearing, apparently forward of her beam, the fog signal of a vessel the position of which is not ascertained shall, so far as the circumstances of the case admit, stop her engines. . . ."

(2) If you stop the engines you lessen the danger & give yourself better information than if you go on with the engines moving, as was done in this case (BUCKNILL, J.).—THE KONING WILLEM I., [1903] P. 114; 72 L. J. P. 28; 88 L. T. 807; 9 Asp. M. L. C. 425.

5732. Duty to stop immediately—On first hearing whistle.]—(1) A steamship, the D., in a dense fog off Ushant, proceeding at slow speed, heard a whistle about three points on her starboard bow; the whistle was repeated several times & answered by the D. In about a quarter of an hour from the first sound of the whistle the steamship E. appeared about a length from the D., crossing from starboard to port. The engines of the D. were reversed full speed, but a collision occurred: —Held: the D. was to blame [as well as the E.], for she should have been brought to as complete a standstill as possible, without getting out of command, at an early period after the first sound of the whistle, & should have also stopped & reversed sooner.

(2) Under Article 13 (1) "a moderate speed," in a river or narrow channel, means that a vessel shall be brought nearly to a standstill, whether the whistle or fog horn of another vessel is heard or not, but in the open sea the Article need not be so strictly construed, unless a whistle or fog horn is heard.

(3) Under Article 18 (2) as soon as it is perceived by those on a steamer in a dense fog that a vessel is coming substantially nearer, the steamer should stop & reverse.

(4) To a sailing ship Article 18 does not apply, because she cannot stop & reverse, but she ought, if she is under full sail, to take sail off till she brings herself as nearly to a standstill as is possible whilst being under command (BRETT, M.R.).—THE DORDOGNE (1884), 10 P. The whistle of the steamship had been heard fine on the starboard bow of the sailing vessel; but the engines of the tug were not stopped in accordance with the above Regulation, on the ground that as the tug was proceeding at the minimum speed compatible with keeping the tow under control, it was not the duty of the tug to stop:—Held: (1) the steamship was not to blame as she had complied with the rule by stopping, & was not bound to reverse before she did so; (2) both tug & tow were to blame, as it was practicable for the tug to have stopped her engines & let the way run off the tow.—THE CHALLENGE & THE DUC D'AUMALE, [1905] P. 198; 74 L. 5748. —— —— Position ascertained before vessel hidden by fog bank.]—Pltfs.' steamship when making about 8 knots saw defts.' steamship 3 miles off about a point on the port bow. Defts.' vessel was making about 10 knots, & the vessels were on opposite courses. Pltfs.' vessel was kept on her course & defts.' vessel broadened to about two points on her port bow, the vessels thus approaching so as to pass clear port to port. A fog bank then hid defts.' vessel from sight, & pltfs.' vessel continued on her course & speed until she reached the fog bank, when she heard the whistle of defts.' vessel. She then sounded her whistle & her engines were put to slow, when another whistle was heard & her engines were put full speed astern & her whistle sounded. Defts.' vessel then came in sight 300 or 400 yards off under a starboard helm & at high speed, & struck & sank pltfs.' vessel. Defts.' vessel was found to blame for going at an excessive speed in a fog & in starboarding her helm, & there was no appeal as to this. Pltfs.' vessel was found not to blame:—Held: on the facts of the case, inasmuch as the position & course of defts.' vessel were ascertained before she was hidden by the fog so that the vessels would pass clear port to port, pltfs.' vessel did not act wrongly in continuing her speed & in not sounding her whistle sooner.—ORAVIA (OWNERS) v. NEREUS (OWNERS), THE ORAVIA (1907), 97 L. It was argued that the non-stopping of The S. & the excessive speed of The E., in breach of Article 16 of the Regulations, were justified respectively on the grounds: (a) that by the orders of the French Admlty. authorities the vessels had to follow their escorts, & obey their instructions; (b) that the circumstances of the war & the risk of enemy submarines justified a departure from the regulation; & (c) in the case of The E. assuming the whistles were heard, that the presence of other vessels of the convoy astern of her prevented her stopping:—Held: (1) even assuming the orders

5754. —— Vessel some distance away on port quarter.]—Two steam vessels, proceeding in opposite directions, came into collision during a dense fog, off the coast of Portugal. Those in charge of pltfs.' vessel did not "stop her engines" in accordance with Article 16 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, on "hearing apparently forward of her beam, the fog signal of" defts.' vessel, because another vessel was sounding her whistle apparently on the port quarter & overtaking her; whilst those in charge of defts.' vessel alleged that they did not stop her engines on first hearing the whistle of pltfs.' vessel, because two other vessels, sounding their whistles, one on each bow, helped to ascertain the position of defts.' vessel, which was a long way off, & as soon as the whistle was distinctly made out to be on the starboard bow the engines were stopped:—Held: both vessels were to blame, as both had infringed the positive directions as to stopping the engines contained in Article 16. In the case of pltfs.' vessel, it would have been incumbent on the alleged overtaking vessel to have stopped when she heard the whistle of pltfs.' vessel indicating that she was stopped, so that any danger would have been averted. In the case of the defts.' vessel, as distance & bearing could not be at once definitely determined in fog, it was no excuse for a breach of the rule that the whistle of the other vessel was heard apparently a long way off.—THE BRITANNIA, [1905] P. 98; 74 L. J. P. 46; 92 L. T. 634; 21 T. L. R. 119; 10 Asp. M. L. C. 65.

5755. —— Sailing vessel at anchor—One hundred yards astern.]—A collision took place in a dense fog between the Children's Hope, a steam drifter, & the Ariadne, a steam trawler. The Children's Hope was stemming the ebb tide waiting for the fog to clear before going up the Humber to Grimsby. In order to stem the tide, which was running with the force of 2 or 3 knots, her engines were kept working slowly ahead, & she was duly sounding her whistle for fog. In these circumstances the whistle of the steam trawler Ariadne was heard on the port bow. The Children's Hope blew her whistle, but did not stop her engines, her excuse for not doing so being that there was a sailing vessel at anchor about 100 yards astern of her, & that the tide would have taken her on to that vessel had she stopped. Shortly afterwards the Ariadne, which was outward bound, loomed in sight about two ship's lengths off, & almost at once her stem struck the port bow of the Children's Hope doing damage. It was admitted that the Ariadne was to blame, but it was contended that the Children's Hope was also to blame for a breach of Article 16 of the International Regulations in not stopping her engines on hearing the whistle of the Ariadne forward of her beam:—Held: there were no circumstances justifying the non-observance by the Children's Hope of the provisions of Article 16, &, therefore, she was also to blame for the collision. —THE ARIADNE (1911), 27 T. When two steamships, invisible to each other by reason of a thick fog, find themselves gradually drawing nearer until they are within a few ships' length, they are within the second direction of Article 18, & each of them ought at once to stop & reverse: unless the fog signals of the other vessel have unequivocally indicated that she is steered so as to pass clear without involving risk of collision; or unless other circumstances exist which make it dangerous to stop & reverse.

Shortly afterwards another blast of the fog horn was heard closer to & nearer on the bow, & her engines were then reversed full speed & her helm put hard aport, but a collision occurred:—Held: the steamship was to blame for not reversing when she stopped her engines, since those on board of her ought to have known that the fog horn they heard came from a sailing vessel on the starboard tack not far off, & that with the wind where it was the sailing vessel must be on a course crossing that of the steamship from port to starboard. It was the duty of the steamship under Articles 20 & 22 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea to avoid passing ahead of the sailing vessel, &, to enable her to perform that duty, it was necessary for her under Article 23 to reverse her engines.—THE MERTHYR (1898), 79 L. 5770. —— —— ——.]—A collision occurred during a dense fog in the North Sea between a steamer & an iron barque which was in tow of a tug. The captain of the steamer heard a faint whistle, which appeared to him to be a considerable distance away, about five points on his starboard bow. Two minutes afterwards he heard a second whistle, which appeared to him to be a little broader, & he estimated that the distance between the vessels was about three-quarters of a mile. This was a mistake on his part, as the vessels were then close together. He then heard a third whistle, &, as it appeared not so broad on his bow, but more distinct, he immediately stopped & reversed his engines full speed astern. The tug & barque directly afterwards loomed through the fog & the collision took place, resulting in the barque being sunk. He was mistaken, as a matter of fact, in thinking that, when he heard the second whistle, the vessels were some distance away from each other:—Held: the burden of proof lay on the steamer to show that, when her captain heard the second whistle, the indications were such as to convey to a seaman of reasonable skill that the two vessels were so approaching that they would pass well clear of one another, but that had not been shown, because at that time he was mistaken, in point of fact, in thinking that the two vessels were some distance apart, & consequently he ought then to have stopped & reversed his engines.—THE KNARWATER (1894), 63 L. to a point & a half on the port bow, & estimated to be at a considerable distance. Whilst the vessel was losing steerage way & falling off her course the sound of subsequent whistles apparently broadened a point. The engines were then put dead slow ahead to get steerage way & bring the vessel back to her course, & so continued for some twenty minutes, during which time, although the sound of the whistle was getting closer, it was estimated to have broadened so as to be about four points on the port bow. A collision occurred: —Held: as in fog the estimated bearing of sound signals cannot be relied on, there was no sufficient ground for assuming that the sound of the whistle was broadening to such an extent as to justify continuing on for twenty minutes without stopping from time to time, &, therefore, there had been a breach of Article 16, paragraph 2, of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, by which "a steam vessel hearing, apparently forward of her beam, the fog signal of a vessel the position of which is not ascertained, shall, so far as the circumstances of the case admit, stop her engines, & then navigate with caution until danger of collision is over."—THE ARAS, [1907] P. 28; 76 L. 5820. —— Unless "not under command."]—Two sailing vessels were approaching one another so as to involve risk of collision, the one close hauled on the starboard tack, showing her green light to the other, the other running free, showing her red light; but also exhibiting two red lights as signals that from an accident she was "not under command," &, therefore, could not get out of the way. The closehauled vessel being unable to luff owing to the presence of the green & masthead lights of a steam vessel on her starboard bow, put her helm up, & would have crossed the bows of the vessel running free, had not the vessel defeated the manœuvre by porting. In an action of damage by collision:—Held: the vessel running free was alone to blame, as she had indicated by her two red lights & side lights that she was not under command, & was making way through the water. She should, therefore, have kept her course so as to enable the closehauled vessel, otherwise entitled to keep her course, to get out of the way.

Qu.: whether a vessel is, in the circumstances, "not under command," so as to justify her under Article 4 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, in exhibiting the appropriate signal, is a nautical question for the assessors.

Their [The Elder Brethren's] view is that defts.' ship was, in the circumstances, not under command, having regard to all the conditions of the traffic, & the action which she might be called upon to take, to act promptly & properly for other vessels. I understand by that, that although it would be possible for a vessel going as she was to alter her course slowly, or to take action some way for the purpose of altering her course for a vessel which she might meet & so get out of the way, she had not only one vessel to consider when she put up these lights, she had to consider the traffic in the Channel & all the vessels out of the way of which she might have to keep (GORELL BARNES).—THE HAWTHORNBANK, [1904] P. 120; 73 L. 5828. Possibility of sailing nearer wind.]—A sailing vessel, sailing on the starboard tack very near the wind, met a steamer. The vessel did not put her helm to port, & a collision ensued. The judge left it to the jury to say whether the vessel was closehauled on the starboard tack, & whether she would have lost command by putting her helm to port; intimating his own opinion as to the fact to be that a vessel may be closehauled, though not quite so near the wind as she could lie; & that a vessel going about was not under command. The verdict was for pltf. On a rule for a new trial on the ground of misdirection:—Held: the direction was unexceptionable.

I think the jury very justly found that the ship was closehauled, though they might think tha tshe could be put a quarter of a point nearer to the wind (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.).—CHADWICK v. CITY OF DUBLIN STEAM PACKET CO. (1856), 6 E. & B. 771; 3 Jur. N. S. 207; 119 E. R. 1051.

5829. ——.]—The custom of sailors to treat sailing ships when in the trades as closehauled ships when they are sailing a point or two from being as closehauled as they can lie, does not affect the legal construction of the regulations, & the ct. will not exonerate vessels so sailing from duties applicable to sailing ships in other latitudes. Semble: a sailing ship is closehauled within the meaning of Article 14 if she is sailing half a point free of the nearest she can lie to the wind, but not if she is two points off.

The sailing ship E. W. while sailing free in the trades saw the red light of the sailing vessel A. on her starboard bow. The A. was sailing closehauled, as it is called in the trades, but was in fact not as close to the wind as she could lie. As the vessels approached the E. W. ported to keep out of the way of the A. At about the same time the A. not only luffed up as close as she could to the wind, but also went a little farther under a starboard helm, thus counteracting the porting of the E. W., & a collision occurred:—Held: the A. altered her course in breach of Article 22, & was to blame for the collision.—THE EARL WEMYS (1889), 61 L. T. 289; 6 Asp. M. L. C. 407, C. A.

A steamer towing has not the same obligations to give way to sailing vessels as a steamer not towing.

A vessel may within that article keep out of the way by stopping, or by going ahead, or by starboarding, or by porting, or by going astern as the circumstances of the case may require.

The ship was closehauled, & when first sighted by the barque was approaching her on her lee beam:—Held: the ships were crossing each other, & it was the duty of the barque, being the windward vessel, to get out of the way of the other.

There is no fixed rule as to when a ship is to be considered as crossing or overtaking, but the question must be decided from the circumstances of each particular case.—THE PECKFORTON CASTLE (1878), 3 P. D. 11; 47 L. J. P. 69; 37 L. T. 816; 26 W. R. 346; 3 Asp. M. L. C. 533, C. A.

5932. Duty to ascertain precise position.]—The foreign steam vessel B. O. saw the green & white lights of another steamer (the English steam vessel B. D.) distant about a mile & a half, & a point on the starboard bow. The B. O. ported. The B. D. kept her course, & at the last moment starboarded:—Held: the B. O. ought either to have kept her course, or to have slowed until the precise situation of the other vessel had been ascertained; the B. O. improperly ported, & was therefore to blame.—THE BLACK DIAMOND (1863), 9 L. T. 396; 12 W. R. 219; 1 Mar. L. C. 399.

5933. Duty to give appropriate signal.]—A steam vessel on a course of N. 26° W. sighted the masthead & then the green light of a steam vessel, which was on a course of S. 74° E. about two points on the port bow, about six miles off. The vessels ultimately collided. The steam vessel on the N. 26° W. course, whose duty it was to keep her course & speed under Article 21, obeyed the Article until shortly before the collision, when she slowed her engines & sounded a long warning blast, & shortly afterwards put her engines full speed astern & sounded three short blasts on her whistle. The steam vessel on the S. 74° E. course, whose duty it was to keep out of the way under Article 19 & avoid crossing ahead under Article 22, starboarded & alleged she heard a short blast from the vessel on the N. 26° W. course, when she put her engines full speed astern & sounded three short blasts on her whistle, keeping her starboard helm up to the collision. In an action for damage:—Held: (1) the vessel on the N. 26° W. course, which, while admittedly keeping her course, eased her speed, was not to blame for doing so; for, it being difficult to decide when the precise moment has arrived at which the giving-way vessel should take action, the officer in charge must be allowed some latitude, & when it is shown that he is carefully watching the other vessel & endeavouring to do his best to act at the right moment, he ought not to be held to blame even if it afterwards appears that he waited too long or acted too soon; (2) the vessel on the S. 47° E. course was to blame for attempting to cross ahead of the other vessel & for not indicating her course on her whistle when she starboarded & when she first reversed her engines.—THE HUNTSMAN (1911), 104 L. T. 464; 11 Asp. M. L. C. 606.

Rules to Prevent Collision at Sea, Art. 19, provides that when vessels are crossing so as to involve risk of collision, the vessel which has the other on her starboard side shall keep out of the way of the other:—Held: within the meaning of said rule, the Harlem was a crossing ship, carrying proper regulation lights, & that being so, the Durley Chine was obliged to keep out of her way.—R. v. THE HARLEM (N. to Monte Video, on crossing courses, the K. having the H.'s green light open on her port bow. Accordingly, under Articles 19 & 21 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, it was the duty of the K. to keep her course & speed, & of the H. to keep out of the way. When the vessels were nearly two miles apart the H. ported 3½ points, but did not blow a helm signal as required by Article 28. The K., when she got the Whistling Buoy abeam, starboarded to get to her course out to sea, & the H. failed to stop & reverse with the result that the two ships came into collision :—Held: both vessels were to blame, the K. for not keeping her course & the H. for not stopping & reversing, & also for not giving the appropriate signal on the whistle when she began to port, it not being proved that the vessels were too far apart for the whistle to be heard, or that the breach of Article 28 was not a contributory cause of the collision; & the blame should be divided equally.—S.S. 5935. Duty to keep course—When departure justifiable.]—Where two vessels were approaching each other in Canadian waters on courses which converged at a point outside a harbour where each vessel expected to pick up a pilot :—Held: as they were so doing on courses & at speeds which would probably bring them to that point so as to present a danger of collision when they reached it, they were vessels crossing so as to involve risk of collision within Articles 19, 22 & 23 of the Regulations of 1897, which had been substituted for those contained in Canadian R. S. c. 79; & consequently it was the duty, negligently disregarded, of resps.' vessel, which had the aplts.' vessel on her own starboard side, to keep out of her way, there being no special circumstances within Article 27 to authorise a departure from that rule; (2) aplts.' vessel was not to blame under Article 21. 5937. —— Meaning of.]—When two steam vessels are crossing, so as to involve risk of collision, the vessel which has the other on her own starboard side shall, under Article 19 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, keep out of the way of the other, &, to enable her effectually to do so, it is provided by Article 21 that the other shall keep her course & speed; but the obligation, with reference to speed, incumbent upon the latter vessel, is subject to the qualification that if she is, at the material time, to the knowledge of the giving-way vessel, properly engaged in an ordinary nautical manœuvre, such as picking up a pilot, she will be entitled to carry it out, although the operation involves a reduction of speed.—THE ROANOKE, [1908] P. 231; 77 L. Pltfs.' vessel, which had twin screws, kept her course & speed, & at the last hard a-ported, blew one short blast, & kept her engines full ahead, as the best means of preventing her stem from striking. After the first blow the port engine was ordered to be stopped, but this was not done owing to the telegraph not being pulled sharply enough, & the port propeller holed the other vessel, which afterwards sank. The vessels cleared, & pltfs.' vessel continued on her course at full speed, as the collision seemed slight, & the visible damage to the other vessel was not serious, though those on board suspected that their port propeller might have done damage; the other vessel blew some long blasts on her whistle, & pltfs.' vessel inquired by flags whether she required assistance, to which there was no reply, & she proceeded :—Held: (1) defts.' vessel was alone to blame; (2) pltfs.' vessel was right in her manœuvre of hard a-porting, & to reverse then would have counteracted it & been wrong; (3) being bound to keep her course & speed under Article 21 of the Sea Regulations, 1897, she was not to blame under the circumstances, even if there might have been an error of judgment in keeping her speed too long; (4) she was not to blame for the mistake with the telegraph in the extreme peril of the collision; (5) that though under the circumstances her master had neglected to "stay by" within 1894 Act, s. 422, still the collision was entirely caused by the other vessel. —THE TRYST, [1909] P. 333; 79 L. 5941. Duty to stop & reverse.]—The A. & B. were crossing within the meaning of Art. 16, & it was the duty of the A. to keep out of the way of the B., but she did not do so. The B. when from a quarter to half a mile distant slackened her speed & continued with slackened speed to within 300 yards of the A., & then stopped & reversed, but not in time to prevent a collision :—Held: the B. must be held, for not stopping & reversing sooner, to blame as well as the A. Arts. 16 & 18 are intended to be applicable according to the circumstances as they would present themselves to the mind of a prudent sailor, & come into force before the risk of collision is fixed & determined.

The consideration must always be in these cases, not whether the rule was in fact applicable, but were the circumstances such that it ought to have been present to the mind of the person in charge that it was applicable (BRETT, M.R.).

The A., no doubt, ought to have acted, but she did not act. She was obstinately going on.

What ought the officer on board the B. to have done then? He had a right to think she would not continue her obstinacy (BRETT, M.R.).

Another rule of interpretation of these Regulations is, the object of them being to avoid risk of collision, that they are all applicable at a time when the risk of collision can be avoided, not that they are applicable when the risk of collision is already fixed & determined (BRETT, M.R.).

When you speak of rules which are to regulate the conduct of people, those rules can only apply to circumstances which must or ought to be known to the parties at the time (BRETT, M.R.).

The basis of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea is that they are instructions to those in charge of ships as to their conduct; & the legislature has not thought it enough to say, "We will give you rules which shall prevent a collision"; they have gone further & said that "for the safety of navigation we will give you rules which shall prevent risk of collision" (BRETT, M.R.).—THE BERYL (1884), 9 P. H.* . . . proceeding at seven knots an hour, on a W. ½ N. course . . . until she had drawn up on the starboard beam of the B. H. when the M. altered her course to W.S.W., & a collision occurred. The M. charged the B. H. with a breach of Article 16 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea. The B. H. charged the M. with a breach of Article 20. The ct. found the M. alone to blame:—Held: obligation upon the M., under Article 20, as the "overtaking" ship, to keep out of the way, continued, although she had ceased to be within the area lighted by the sternlight, & had advanced into a position in which she could see the side light of the "overtaken" ship.

The vessels were on crossing courses, & the F., having the E. on her own starboard side, under Article 19 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, had the duty of keeping out of the way. It was contended on behalf of the F. that in the special circumstances, the object being not to keep out of the way but to come within hailing distance, Article 19 did not apply, & that the case was governed solely by Article 29 (the "good seamanship" rule):—Held: (1) Article 19 applied, & in failing to take proper steps to keep clear of the E. the F. was to blame; (2) the E. as the "keep course & speed" vessel was also to blame for altering her course & speed; (3) the blame must be distributed in the proportion of three-fourths to the F. & one-fourth to the E.—THE FANCY, [1917] P. 13; 86 L. v. Narrow Channels and Particular Places.

5955. Navigating rivers—Rounding bend.]—In inferring the intended movements of a vessel approaching from a contrary direction, the relative position of the two vessels when they first come in sight of each other must not alone be regarded; other circumstances, such as the bend of the river, or the necessity of avoiding another vessel, which may occasion the apparent alteration of course, must be considered. By 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, vessels navigating narrow channels are at liberty to go on whichever side they please, taking care to observe the regulations for preventing collision. A steam vessel coming up the river Thames came in sight of another steam vessel proceeding down the river at the time she was rounding a bend of the river, & for that purpose had placed her head in such a direction that, unless her course was changed, the steamers would, if the former kept her course, cross each other so as to involve risk of collision; whereupon the steamer coming up the river, having the other on her starboard side, changed her course so as to keep out of the way, if the other steamer followed the direction in which her head was turned; the latter not doing so, but pursuing her intention of rounding the bend of the river, the two steamers came in collision. A suit having been instituted against the steamer rounding the bend of the river:—Held: (1) Article 14 did not, in the circumstances, apply, & pltfs.' steamer was not justified by it; (2) the steamer sued was acting in conformity with Article 18 which directs, that where by the Steering & Sailing Rules "one of the two ships is to keep out of the way, the other shall keep her course," & the steamer sued was not in any way to blame.

(3) It was admitted on both sides, that this was not a case of two steam vessels meeting end on, or nearly end on, so as to require each of them to put the helm to port in obedience to the Article 13 of the Regulations (LORD CHELMSFORD).—GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO. v. HEDLEY, THE VELOCITY (1869), L. 5956. —— ——.]—It is the general practice for steam vessels going down the river Thames to keep on the north side. If, therefore, a vessel rounding a bend on the north side, under a port helm, on her way up the river, sees the red light of one rounding the same bend on her way down, over her starboard bow, & nearer the north side than she is herself, she is not justified in supposing that the vessel coming down will cross her north & pass her on her port side. 5957. —— ——.]—The crossing of vessels "recrossing so as to involve risk of collision," & the consideration which arise in regard to vessels in the open sea are not the same as those which apply to the reaches of a winding river. Whether or not vessels are "crossing vessels" in a river depends on their presumable courses, & the question, therefore, always turns on the reasonable inference to be drawn as to a vessel's future course from her position at a particular moment, & this greatly depends upon the nature of the locality where she is at that moment.—NORMANDIE (OWNERS OF NORWEGIAN S.S.) v. PEKIN (OWNERS OF BRITISH S.S.), THE PEKIN, [1897] A. 5958. —— ——.]—A steamship going down the river Elbe, & seeing the three lights of a steam tug ahead or a little on her port bow, ported to give more room, thereby bringing herself well over to her proper starboard side of the channel; but the tug starboarded & got on to the starboard bow, whereupon the steamship slightly starboarded & steadied, bringing the vessels green to green at half to three-quarters of a mile & about a point & a half on the starboard bow. The tug then ported back, & whilst crossing the bows of the steamship, was sunk in collision. The tug was found alone to blame for wrongful manœuvring without helm signals:—Held: the steamship was also to blame, for when those in charge saw that, though they had starboarded & steadied, the green light of the tug did not broaden, but was, for an appreciable time, getting finer on their starboard bow, they ought to have realised that there was "risk of collision" within the meaning of the preliminary Article to the Steering & Sailing Rules of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, & they should, therefore, as a matter of seamanship under Article 29, have at once stopped & reversed.—THE CITY OF BERLIN, [1908] P. 110; 77 L. 5967. General rule.]—The C. while proceeding at the rate of about three knots an hour in a thick fog, heard the whistle of another steamship about four points on the port bow. The C. kept her course & speed, & the whistle of the other vessel was heard to be apparently broadening. Shortly afterwards the other steamship was seen close to & bearing five or six points on the port bow of the C. The engines of the C. were then at once stopped & reversed, but a collision occurred:—Held: the C. was in part to blame for the collision for having failed, in accordance with Rule 16, Regulations for Preventing Collisions, when the other ship's whistle was first heard, to stop her engines, & afterwards to navigate with caution until all danger of collision was over, & was not justified in continuing her speed under Article 21. Although Article 21 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea directing a ship to keep her course & speed is a general rule, it is qualified by Article 16 & hence where two steamships in a fog are crossing, each ought to stop her engines if she hears the whistle of the other forward of her beam.—THE CATHAY (1899), 81 L. 5972. Duty of vessel sailing free.]—Where two ships are crossing each other, the one sailing free & the other closehauled, it is the duty of the ship sailing free to give way on one side or other to the ship that is closehauled; & where the one ship is to keep out of the way, the other is to keep her course; subject to any special circumstances in each particular case which may render a departure from the above rules necessary in order to avoid immediate danger.—THE BOANERGES & THE ANGLO INDIAN (1865), 2 Mar. L. C. 239.

5973. ——.]—Article 12 of the Sailing Rules, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 25, provides that, " When two sailing ships are crossing, so as to involve risk of collision, then, if they have the wind on different sides, the ship with the wind on the port side shall keep out of the way of the ship with the wind on the starboard side; except in the case in which the ship with the wind on the port side is closehauled & the other ship free, in which case the latter ship shall keep out of the way; but if they have the wind on the same side, or if one of them has the wind aft, the ship which is to windward shall keep out of the way of the ship which is to leeward." Article 18: " Where, by the above rules, one of two ships is to keep out of the way, the other shall keep her course subject to the qualifications contained in the following Article." Article 19: " In obeying & construing these rules, due regard must be had to all dangers of navigation, & due regard must also be had to any special circumstances which may exist in any particular case, rendering a departure from the above rules necessary, in order to avoid immediate danger."

A collision took place between two sailing vessels crossing, the wind being about S.S.E., & the vessel C. steering about N.N.E., the vessel S. about W. by S.; the vessel C. did not " keep out of the way," but kept her course, & the vessel S., instead of keeping her course, ported her helm, alleging " immediate danger " as a reason for so doing:—Held: both vessels were to blame—the vessel C. for not having kept out of the way, in accordance with the provision in the last clause of Article 12; & the vessel S. for not having kept her course, but having improperly ported her helm, there being no evidence of " immediate danger " to justify a departure from Article 18.—THE SPRING (1866), L. 5978. ——.] — A flotilla of torpedo boat destroyers, proceeding down the English Channel in two lines of close formation, sighted the masthead & red lights of a merchant steam vessel drawing across the head of the starboard, & approaching the port, division. When in the position of a crossing vessel with regard to the second destroyer of the port division, the officer in charge of that destroyer kept his station until danger was imminent, & then, putting his engines full speed ahead, tried by hard-a-porting to throw his starboard quarter clear but failed to get across the bows of the merchant vessel. In an action of damage by collision:—Held: both ships were to blame, the merchant vessel for bad look out, whereby she got in between the two lines of the flotilla, without regard to the Board of Trade notice warning single ships to keep out of the way of a squadron of warships, & then persisted in maintaining her course & speed under Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, Article 21, when she should have acted under article 27, & in the special circumstances, passed down between the two lines of the flotilla. The destroyer was also to blame, for, under the article of the King's Regulations equivalent to article 19 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, it was the duty of the officer in charge, having the merchant vessel on his own starboard side, to keep out of the way, & though he was required under the King's Regulations to keep his station & not change the course, except to avoid immediate danger, &, therefore, was entitled to a reasonable time to see what the merchant vessel would do, he had, in the circumstances, delayed action too long.—THE ETNA, [1908] P. 269; 77 L. The Board of Trade Notice, 1897, in effect warns single ships to keep out of the way of, & avoid passing through, a squadron of warships, but pltfs.' officers, being Spaniards, had not heard of this notice. The Spanish steamship hoisted the Spanish ensign in compliment to the cruiser, & kept her course & speed until just before the collision, purporting to act under Article 21 of the Sea Regulations; & the second cruiser in line came into collision with her, deft., the navigating officer in charge of the cruiser, being negligent among other respects in not manœuvring to keep out of the way until too late. The Spanish steamship was charged with negligence in not keeping out of the way of the squadron & in not obeying the Board of Trade Notice. Pltfs.' master & deft. both testified at the trial that by the regulations which applied it was the duty of the Spanish steamship to keep her course & speed, & of the cruiser to keep out of the way:—Held: in the circumstances the Spanish steamship was not negligent in keeping her course & speed under Article 21 of the Sea Regulations; as regards the Board of Trade Notice, pltfs.' officers being Spaniards & not having heard of the notice, were not negligent as regards it, & deft. knowing that the other vessel was Spanish, deft. was alone to blame.—H.M.S. Semble: if a vessel in close proximity to another vessel is put in stays & misses, it is the duty of the persons on board to square the mainyard & so let the vessel pay off.

It is true, a steamer is considered always to have the wind free; but it does not, in my opinion, follow, that a steamer having a merchant vessel in tow is always free. That will depend, I conceive, upon the state of the wind & weather, the direction in which the steamer is towing, & the nature of the impediments that she may meet with in her course. The captain of the A., to protect his employers' interest & earn salvage from the owners of the cargo of S., took the S. in tow, & towed her into the English Channel, & whilst so doing came into collision with a sailing ship close hauled on the starboard tack. The damage done by the A. caused the sailing ship to sink, but before she sank the S. ranged up alongside of her & came into contact with her. The A. first saw the green light of the ship at a distance of three quarters of a mile, & then, instead of slackening speed or starboarding her helm, attempted to cross the bows of the ship. The ship saw at two miles' distance the A. & S., with a great length of hawser between them, & the red lights of both, & kept her course:—Held: (1) the A. was to blame for the collision; (2) having regard to the exceptional circumstances under which the towing was undertaken, the governing as well as the motive power being wholly with the A., the S. was not liable to be condemned in damages occasioned by the collision. The S. cannot be deemed in intendment of law, to be one vessel with the A., or liable for her negligence.

G. going at a rate of between 12 & 13 knots an hour. J. sailing closehauled on the "port tack," & being two or three miles distant, when she first sighted G., instead of keeping her course, ported her helm:—Held: (1) under Article 18 of the Sailing Regulations, issued in pursuance of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, it was the duty of J. to have kept her course without alteration, unless, as provided by Article 19, the danger of collision was so imminent when G. was sighted as to render a departure from Article 18 necessary to avoid danger, & she was, therefore, partly to blame for the collision, having contributed to it by porting; (2) G. was also to blame, as, even if J. had kept her course, from the rate of speed G. was advancing a collision was inevitable, it being, under Article 15 of the Sailing Regulations, the duty of a steamer meeting a sailing vessel to reverse her engines & slacken her speed in sufficient time, so as, having regard to the state of the weather, as far as possible, to avoid a collision.—GREAT SHIP CO. v. SHARPLES, THE GREAT EASTERN (1864), 3 Moo. The trawler was carrying a lantern in front of her foremast head, showing a white, green, & red light, & about 6 or 7 feet below it a white light, according to Article 10 for Preventing Collisions at Sea, as amended by an Order in Council of Dec. 30, 1884. The trawler did not attempt to get out of the way of the sailing ship, so as to comply with Article 17, by which a steamship is to keep out of the way of a sailing ship:—Held: the trawler was not to blame for the collision; Article 17 did not apply, inasmuch as there were "special circumstances" within the meaning of Article 23 which authorised a departure from Article 17; by carrying the lights which she did, she apprised other vessels that she was not able to get out of the way, for such lights as she carried were the regular lights of steam vessels engaged in trawling which are not bound by the requirements of Article 17.

She is . . . a steam trawler; she had her trawl down. . . . There would be a difficulty in the way of her reversing, having regard to the fact that her trawl was down. . . . If a trawler has not only sufficient way on her to keep herself in command but also sufficient way to act with effect in altering her course for an approaching ship then . . . those in charge of her should act as the regulations require an unencumbered vessel to act (BUTT, J.). —THE TWEEDSDALE (1889), 14 P. 6016. —— Of trawler shooting nets—Showing proper lights.]—A sailing drifter & a steam drifter came into collision, at night, in the North Sea at a time when the sailing vessel, under reduced canvas owing to the heavy weather, & exhibiting the side lights for a vessel under way, was proceeding towards her fishing ground at the rate of about 4 knots, heading to the south-westward. The steam vessel, with her engines stopped, & moving through the water to the E.S.E. before the wind, under her mizzen, at something less than a knot, was engaged in shooting her nets, & as these nets were "partly in the water" she was exhibiting the two white lights prescribed by Article 9 (b) (1906) of the regulations for preventing collisions at sea in the case of vessels fishing with drift nets; but the lower of the two lights was not in the direction of the nets as required by the rule. Those in charge of her, seeing that a collision with the sailing vessel was imminent, attempted to avoid it by moving the engines astern, but, after a few revolutions, the propeller fouled the nets & the vessel became helpless. In an action of damage by collision brought by the owners of the sailing vessel against the steam vessel:—Held: the sailing vessel was alone to blame, as she ought to have kept out of the way, for the other vessel, though a steamer, was incumbered by her nets, &, therefore, there were "special circumstances," within Article 27 of the regulations, rendering it not necessary for her, under Article 20, to keep out of the way of the sailing vessel; though the direction of the nets of the steam vessel was not properly indicated by the position of the lower of the two lights carried by her, this could not by any possibility have caused or contributed to the collision, &, therefore, she was not to blame for an infringement of the regulations under 1894 Act, s. 419.

She was a vessel fishing with drift nets, having her nets partly in the water, within the meaning of Article 9 (b), although she was only shooting her nets preparatory to fishing in the ordinary sense of the term (EVANS, P.).—THE PITGAVENEY, [1910] P. 215; 79 L. 6017. —— Of trawler hauling in trawl.]—A steam trawler fishing in the daytime in the vicinity of the Dogger Bank, & indicating her occupation to an approaching sailing vessel by the display of a basket, in accordance with Article 9 (1906), subsect. k of the regulations for preventing collisions at sea, was run into & sunk by the sailing vessel owing to the negligence of those in charge of that vessel in not keeping a good look out. It was contended on behalf of the sailing vessel that, though she was to blame, the trawler was also to blame for not using her steam to keep out of the way of the sailing vessel under Article 20 of the above regulations, by which "When a steam vessel & a sailing vessel are proceeding in such directions as to involve risk of collision, the steam vessel shall keep out of the way of the sailing vessel":—Held: the trawler was not to blame, for, at the material time, she was engaged in the operation of hauling in her trawl. In such circumstances she was an incumbered vessel unable, until her trawl was up, to move her engines ahead or astern without risk of fouling her propeller. She was, therefore, not a steam vessel "proceeding" so as to involve risk of collision within Article 20.—THE GLADYS, [1910] P. 13; 79 L. J. P. 5; 101 L. T. 720; 26 T. L. R. 66; 11 Asp. M. L. A collision occurred between the steamship A. & the steamship B. The evidence was most contradictory. It was, however, satisfactorily proved that although the crew of the ship B. had been until a few minutes before the collision engaged in getting the anchors on board in shipshape order, & that the captain had left the deck when he ought to have been there, yet that when it was perceived the two vessels were approaching in such a manner as to involve risk of collision, the engines were reversed, & the ship stopped. On board the ship A. everything was proved to have been in good order at the time of the collision. But her captain did not stop his engines until almost the moment of collision, & consequently the ship A. cut into the ship B. to the water's edge :—Held : there was fault on both sides, contributing to the damage & loss which had been suffered, & therefore neither were entitled to costs.—MACLAREN v. COMPAGNIE FRANCAISE DE NAVIGATION À VAPEUR (1884), 9 App. Cas. 640, H. The engines of the C. had been previously stopped, but the master did not reverse her engines till the red light of the S. was seen ; the vessels soon after came into collision :—Held : the C. was to blame for infringing Article 8 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, because as there was a probability of risk of collision when the master of the C. saw the green & white lights of the S. coming into line, he should, being aware of such probability, have then reversed the engines of the C.—THE STANMORE (1885), 10 P. In a manœuvre by the Thorsa to pass another vessel, the Thorsa & Otto became nearly end on. When about a mile apart, the Thorsa signalled that she was going to starboard, & at the same time put her helm to port to pass the Otto on the port side. This brought her head nearly a point to starboard. The Otto heard, but kept a steady course. Two minutes or so afterwards, when the ships were within half a mile, the Thorsa repeated the signal, & again ported her helm. The Otto immediately afterwards starboarded her helm, bringing her head to port, & went across the bows of the Thorsa. The Thorsa immediately stopped & reversed, but she ran into & sank the Otto. The owners of the Otto while admitting that their vessel had been in fault alleged fault also against the Thorsa in not stopping & reversing at an earlier period :—Held : no fault was attributable to the Thorsa.

The Ravenna was getting under way, &, having hove up her anchor, put her engines ahead, starboarded her helm to cross the channel & proceed up to the Northward, & twice sounded two short blasts on her whistle. The Rose, taking these signals as an invitation to pass starboard to starboard, answered each of the Ravenna's signals with a signal of two short blasts & starboarded her helm. The Ravenna continued on, putting her engines first half speed & then full speed ahead, & the two vessels came into collision, the stern of the Ravenna striking the starboard bow of the Rose. Just before the collision the engines of the Ravenna were reversed full speed astern :—Held : the Roads must be regarded as a narrow channel ; the Rose was not justified in assuming that the Ravenna's starboard helm signals were an invitation to her to pass starboard to starboard, & she was to blame ; but, the Ravenna was also to blame for not taking off her headway when she had received a clear indication that the Rose was not doing that which she was expected to do & which she ought to have done, namely, to keep to the starboard side of the channel.—THE RAVENNA, [1918] P. 297, C. at Cape R. Accordingly they starboarded & continued without stopping their engines. The sound proved to be the signal of defts.' vessel. Had those on board pltfs.' vessel recognised the signal as coming from defts.' vessel it would have been their duty to have stopped their engines in accordance with the Article 16:—Held: it being impossible that the C. had never heard the automatic whistle of the M., the C. was at fault in not stopping, just as the M. was at fault in not stopping when she first became aware of the proximity of another vessel. A defence, that the master of the steamer, under the circumstances, immediately put her helm to port, in compliance with the Trinity House Regulations, not sustained.

As the two vessels are approaching towards each other, the crew of the Perseverance perceive that the helm of the steamer had been put to port, & as soon as they perceive it, they port their own helm immediately aport likewise. A four masted barque, in tow of a tug, in a dense fog at night in the St. George's Channel, was going at the rate of 1½ knots an hour, & did not stop, though she heard the whistle of a steamer on her port side gradually nearing & indicating danger. The steamer was proceeding at about 2½ knots an hour, & heard the whistle of the tug crossing her bows from starboard to port. She ported & reversed her engines on seeing the barque, but struck her at right angles on her port quarter, & was held to blame under article 18 for not stopping sooner:—Held: the barque was not also to blame for not stopping, as a tug incumbered with a tow is not to be deemed a steamship for all purposes under the rules, & the speed was as slow as was possible consistently with keeping the tow-rope sufficiently taut to prevent the risk of the two vessels being drawn together, & the propeller of the tug being fouled.—THE LORD BANGOR, [1896] P. 28; 65 L. The B. struck the G. on her starboard side:—Held: the B. was alone to blame for the collision & Article 18 of the Regulations did not apply under the circumstances to the G., & Article 23 was applicable.—THE BENARES (1883), 9 P. Right to reasonable time to give orders—Position of peril caused by improper navigation of other vessel.]—The steamship R., going from Greenock to Dublin, was steering a course S.W. by S. ½ S., & was travelling at a speed of 13 knots. On entering an area of dense fog she maintained her speed & did not blow her whistle. The steamship W., bound from America for Glasgow, was steering N. & was proceeding at a rate of 3½ knots & was sounding her fog siren. Suddenly the master of the W. became aware of a white light, which turned out to be the masthead light of the R., half a point on the starboard bow & about 1,200 feet away, & he thereupon gave the order hard-a-starboard, but immediately afterwards, on seeing the red light of the R., he gave the order hard-a-port & stop & reverse engines. The original order did not affect the course of the ship, & the interval of time between the two orders was calculated at three seconds. The W. struck the R. forty seconds later on her port-side near the stern. The R., on sighting the W., hard-a-ported until the moment of the collision, when the order hard-a-starboard was given to throw off the stern & minimise the blow. It was conceded that the R. was partly to blame for the collision in navigating at excessive speed:—Held: the proper order for the master of the W. to have given on first sighting the R. was to stop & reverse; but the master, having been put in a position of extreme peril by the improper navigation of the R. was entitled to a short interval for his mind to grasp the situation &, in the circumstances, the first order was superseded by the second with sufficient promptitude to exclude the idea of negligence; the R. was alone to blame for the collision.—U.S. SHIPPING BOARD v. LAIRD LINE, LTD., [1924] A. 6048 i. Not defined as to width or length.]—The width alone of a channel or the fact that it has lateral extensions in the nature of bays, are not conclusive & need not necessarily be regarded as of importance in the determination of what is a "narrow channel" within the meaning of regulation 25.—CANADIAN PACIFIC RY. d. Configuration of shore lines & existence of headlands.]—An important point to consider is whether the configuration of the shore lines & the existence of headlands & other considerations so control & predetermine the movements of ships thereon as to make it a narrow channel. In case of any doubt it should, in the interests of navigation, be resolved in favour of the "narrow-channel" construction.—CANADIAN PACIFIC RY. CO. v. THE CAMOSUN, [1925] Exch. C. R. 39.—CAN.

Now, if you should be of opinion, without regard to what is stated in any boat, or anything of that kind, that the channel had ended, that is to say, that the place of collision was in the open sea, where there is a wide depth of water, an expanse of water on both sides, where ships may safely navigate, then I should come to the conclusion that it is not a narrow channel within the meaning of the section (DR. On the question whether pltfs.' vessel was on the wrong side of the river:—Held: the effect of the placing of the four red conical lighted buoys was to constitute the space of water between them, & the Nore Sand buoys to the south of them, a narrow channel within the meaning of Article 25 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, for, by the uniform system of buoyage adopted on the coast of England, red conical buoys are "starboard hand buoys" denoting that side which would be on the right hand of the mariner entering the river, &, therefore, pltfs.' vessel was justified in being where she was.—THE GUSTAFSBERG, [1905] P. 10; 74 L. The steamship O. was approaching the entrance from the north with a view to enter the harbour, & was keeping to her starboard side of the fairway. The steamship K. had left the harbour on a westerly voyage & was pursuing a north-westerly course across the harbour entrance. The O. gave one short blast on her whistle, the porting sound signal, & ported slightly to keep well over to the starboard side. The K. gave two short blasts, the starboarding signal, & continued on her course, trusting to her speed to pass in front of the O. The O. gave a second short blast, to which the K. replied with a second two short-blast signal. Both vessels then stopped & reversed, but a collision ensued, the stem of the O. striking the starboard bow of the K. :—Held : (1) the K. was to blame, inasmuch as the harbour entrance was a " narrow channel " within the meaning of Article 25, & she ought, in passing through it, to have kept to her starboard side of the fairway ; (2) in the circumstances, the O. was not to blame, either because she had not waited outside the harbour entrance until the K. got clear, or because she had not stopped & reversed sooner than she did, or because she ported after hearing the signals of the K.—THE KAISER WILHELM DER GROSSE, [1907] P. 259 ; 76 L. 6070. St. Lawrence.]—Pltfs.' & defts.' steamships, whilst proceeding, the one up, & the other down, the south channel of the river St. Lawrence, sighted one another at a distance of something under a mile, & were, at that time, practically end on, within Article 18 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea. Those in charge of defts.' vessel, in breach of above Article, starboarded, & were found alone to blame for the collision which followed. Those in charge of pltfs.' vessel ported, in accordance with Article 18, blew a short blast, in accordance with Article 28, & steadied. Shortly afterwards they hard-a-ported, but did not blow another short blast to indicate the course taken. In the ct. below it was found that not blowing the port helm signal, when the hard-a-porting took place, had no effect on the collision :—Held : pltfs.' vessel was also to blame, for the statutory presumption of fault could not be avoided except by showing—which could not be done in this case—that the breach of the rule could not by possibility have contributed to the collision.—THE CORINTHIAN, [1909] P. 260 ; 78 L. ### (d) Rule as to Position in 6071. Former rule—Included proviso as to tide—Giving great scope for exercise of judgment.]—The words of the enactment are these : " That every steam vessel, when meeting or passing any other steam vessel, shall pass as far as may be safe on the port side of such other vessel . . . & every steam vessel navigating any river or narrow channel shall keep as far as is practicable to that side of the fairway or mid-channel of such river or channel which lies on the starboard side of such vessel." . . . It would have been clearer if it had been said, " which lies on the starboard side of such steam vessel "—whereas, some ambiguity is raised through the absence of that definition. . . . It is my duty to bring your attention to the words that follow : " due regard being had to the tide, & to the position of each vessel in such tide." These are very large qualifying words, for the clause means very much like this—you shall keep along that side of the channel which lies on the starboard side of the vessel, provided it may be done with convenience or safety to the vessel you may happen to meet. Therefore, it is a rule laid down, but with very great scope for the judgment of those who are to follow it (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE LEITH (1849), 7 Notes of Cases, 137.

This sect. may be controlled by sect. 291, so as not to apply to a foreign steamship; but a customary course of navigation for all steamships on the river Thames will be presumed to have emanated from sect. 297, which course every foreign steamship is bound to know & obey.

The mere convenience of the foreign steamship, or of custom house, officers in the performance of their duty, will not justify a departure from such customary course of navigation.—THE FYENOORD (1858), Sw. 374; 5 L. T. 462; 166 E. R. 1172, P. C.

She kept her course, intending to pass between them, till she discovered a sloop just on her port-bow in tow of latter tug; she then ported her helm, to pass between the tug & the sloop, & came into collision with the sloop. On a suggestion on behalf of the tug, which was on the port side of mid-channel, of a custom in the Tyne for light-draughted vessels going up to keep to the south side, contrary to the rule of the statute:—Held: no such custom could be maintained, unless an actual local impediment or extraordinary difficulty could be proved.—THE UNITY (1856), Sw. 101; 166 E. 6088. —— Circumstances justifying vessels in crossing.]—Article 25 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea applies to the entrance channel formed by the east & west pier at Swansea, so that it is incumbent on a steam vessel in that narrow channel to keep to that side of mid-channel which lies on her starboard hand, but circumstances may prevent the rule operating to its full extent throughout the channel, for when a vessel is coming away from the tidal basin of the Prince of Wales dock on the east side, & is proceeding down the channel, she will, in order to get on her proper west side, have to cross the channel leading up to the Ocean dry dock, or other dock in the west channel, towards which another vessel, coming in, may be making. In such a case good seamanship dictates that the vessel which will reach the point of intersection of the channels reasonably in advance of the other should keep on, & that the other should wait, though, if both are approaching the point at about the same time, it will be reasonable for the vessel which has the tide against her to wait until the other has passed.

Vessels must cross each other, & however much the starboard hand rule applies, there are circumstances here which prevent it operating to the full extent (SIR GORELL BARNES).—THE PRINCE LEOPOLD DE BELGIQUE, [1909] P. 103; 78 L. J. P. 57; 100 L. T. 201; 25 T. L. R. 183; 11 Asp. M. L. C. 203.

6093. Direction imperative.]—THE USKMOOR, No. 6106, post.

6094. Importance of giving signal.]—(1) It is too late now to question the validity of the direction in the preliminary article of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, that they are not only to be followed by all vessels upon the high seas; but "in all waters connected therewith navigable by seagoing vessels," & the reservation by Article 30 of any "special rule, duly made by local authority, relative to the navigation of any harbour, river, or inland waters," shows that the general regulations were intended by their framers to apply to inland navigation except so far as they would interfere with the operation of a local rule.

(2) It is to my mind far more important that these signals [sound signals in Article 28] should be given when the course taken is not the ordinary one prescribed by the regulations, but is the result of a deduction from the principles that underlie them, & from the dictates of good seamanship, that is to say, a course which has to be taken at the moment by the individual under the particular circumstances of the case, & which is justified only by their special character & the imminent danger that has arisen (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.).

(3) The word "course" could not mean compass course only, because it is quite plain that helm directions & engine directions are meant to indicate the movements of the vessel for the purpose of avoiding collision or to put an end to any condition of danger existing (LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J.)

(4) The Regulations for the Prevention of Collisions at Sea apply to collisions taking place between vessels in the river Amazon.—THE ANSELM, [1907] P. 151; 76 L. J. P. 54; 97 L. T. 16; 23 T. L. R. 378; 51 Sol. Jo. 342; 10 Asp. M. L. C. 438, C. A.

The tug seemed to be acting in accordance with the rule of the road, & the captain of applts.' steamship in proceeding on his course cautiously at half speed did not fail in his duty in any respect.

r. Meaning of safe & practicable.]—In narrow channels every steam vessel shall, when it is safe & practicable, keep to that side of the fairway or mid-channel which lies on the starboard side of such vessel:—Held: the words "safe & practicable" must be taken to imply that the vessel is only obliged to take this course when she can do so without danger of collision.—LOVITT v. THE CALVIN AUSTIN (1904), 9 Exch. S.*, coming up the river Mersey, sighted each other about half a mile apart, the G. S. having the G. on her own starboard bow. To counteract the effect of the tide on her starboard bow the G. ported her helm a little & sounded two separate signals of one short blast. She did not, however, port her helm sufficiently to alter her course to starboard but continued on straight across the river under a slight port, or port & steady, helm. The two vessels came into collision on the Liverpool side of the river:—Held: the port helm signals were misleading in the sense that they had a tendency to mislead; but as in fact they did not appear to have misled the pilot of the G. S., who saw that the G. was not altering her course, the G. was not to blame.—THE GULF OF SUEZ, [1921] P. 318; 90 L. J. P. 321; 125 L. T. 653; 37 T. L. R. 704; 15 Asp. M. L. C. 328, C. A.

ii. When Duty to Signal Arises.

6105. Manœuvre commenced before vessel sighted.]—Pltfs.' steam vessel, after giving a prolonged blast on her whistle, left a dock entrance in the Mersey under easy starboard helm, &, whilst continuing to round under that helm in order to bring up alongside a wall a short distance further up, came into collision with defts.' down coming steamer. It was alleged on behalf of defts. that those in charge of pltfs.' vessel should have indicated that she was directing her course to port by giving two short blasts of her whistle in accordance with Article 28 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, by which, "when vessels are in sight of one another, a steam vessel under way, in taking any course authorised or required by these rules, shall indicate that course by" the appropriate signal:—Held: the rule was not applicable, as the starboard action of the helm began before leaving the entrance, &, when the other vessel was in sight, pltfs.' vessel was not, with reference to that other vessel, taking a course authorised or required by the rules.—THE MOURNE, [1901] P. 68; 70 L. J. P. 7; 83 L. T. 748; 17 T. L. R. 194; 9 Asp. M. L. C. 155.

6106. Duty in case of doubt.]—The direction in Article 28 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, that "when vessels are in sight of one another, a steam vessel under way, in taking any course authorised or required by these rules, shall indicate that course by the specified signals on her whistle or syren," is not only imperative, but the word "authorised" includes any course which, for the safety of the vessels, good seamanship requires to be taken with reference to the other vessel then in sight.

I hope that masters of vessels will in future err, if they err at all, on the side of whistling (JEUNE, P.).—THE USKMOOR, [1902] P. 250; 71 L. J. P. 103; 87 L. T. 55; 51 W. R. 93; 18 T. L. R. 727; 9 Asp. M. L. C. 316.

6109. Duty to give further signals on first signal being ignored.]—A tug which, with a lighter in tow, was crossing the Humber under a slightly starboard helm on account of the ebb tide, starboarded further, & gave a long blast signal to indicate her presence to a steamship, under the stern of which she was passing. The steamship, which was showing a stern light & lying athwart the river waiting to go into dock, came astern to allow another vessel to pass out of dock, & the tug thereupon hard-a-starboarded her helm to clear the stern of the steamship, but failed to give the appropriate two-short-blast signal required by Article 28 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea as applied to the Humber. The steamship had no look out aft, &, in the ct. below, was found alone to blame for a collision with the lighter, whilst the tug was absolved from liability on the ground that the infringement of the rule could not by possibility have contributed to the collision:—Held: the tug was also to blame, for, though those in charge of the steamship were so negligently inattentive that they did not notice what was going on astern of them, it could not be said that, if the two-short-blast signal had not been given by the tug when further starboarding or hard-a-starboarding, as an indication that she was manœuvring for them, the signal might not have been heard & acted upon by those in charge of the steamship in time to have avoided the collision with the lighter; &, therefore, the statutory presumption of fault arose under 1894 Act, s. 419 (4).

The continuing of a helm is just as much a directing of the vessel's head or the vessel's course to one side or the other as changing her course (LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J.).—THE ARISTOCRAT, [1908] P. 9; 77 L. J. P. 57; 97 L. T. 838; 24 T. L. R. 21; 10 Asp. M. L. C. 567, C. A.

The M. gave no signal when she directed her course to port under starboard helm:—Held: while it was only necessary under Article 28 of the Rules for Preventing Collisions at Sea for the M. to sound her whistle when directing her course to port or starboard with reference to a moving vessel, & therefore she was not wrong in omitting to sound her whistle when she starboarded her for the anchored vessel, she ought to have sounded it when the B. came in sight, to indicate that her course was being directed to port.—THE MEGANTIC (1915), 31 T. (b) Duty of Overtaking Vessel.

6125. Duty to keep out of the way—General rule.]—It is primâ facie the duty of an overtaking ship to keep out of the way of a ship ahead of her, but if the latter ship sees another approaching her from a direction where her lights are not visible, & which vessel she has reason to suppose does not, in fact, whether keeping a good look out or not, see her, & is likely to come into collision with her, it is her duty to give some warning to the overtaking ship, not necessarily by exhibiting a light, but by some signal, such as the firing of a gun, the showing a light, or otherwise, which will indicate her whereabouts to the overtaking ship, & call the attention of that ship to the danger of a collision.—THE ANGLO-INDIAN (1875), 33 L. 6128. Application of rule—Foreign vessels.]—Admlty. Regulation 17: "that every vessel overtaking any other vessel shall keep out of the way of the vessel being overtaken," applies to foreign ships as well as to British.

A French ship, under sail, following a British ship in tow on entering a harbour, came into collision with her whilst crossing the bar:—Held: the collision so occurring was occasioned by the negligence of the French ship in not attending to the rule of the road as laid down in Admlty. Regulation 17, & the French ship was liable for the loss caused by such collision.—THE WHEATSHEAF v. THE INTREPIDE (1865), Holt, Adm. 210; 13 L. T. 612; 2 Mar. L. C. 292.

6129. —— In narrow channel.]—The rule as to keeping course & speed, while a perfectly good rule in open waters, cannot always be applied in close waters such as the Mersey, & each case must depend on its own circumstances. In a river like the Mersey a following vessel must watch the vessel ahead & observe what course she is taking with regard to other vessels.—THE WOODA (1915), 31 T. L. R. 222.

6130. Justification for departure from rule—Onus of proof on overtaking ship.]—Admlty. Regulations 17, 18, & 19: "Every vessel overtaking any other vessel shall keep out of the way of the vessel being overtaken, & where by such rules the one ship is to keep out of the way, the other ship shall keep her course, due regard being had, in the observance of both these rules, & their observance being subject, to all dangers of navigation, & to any special circumstances which may exist in any particular case, rendering a departure from such rules necessary in order to avoid immediate danger." Plea: "That a steamer overtaking a sailing vessel could not comply with the first of the above regulations in nsequence of the state of the weather, & the neglect on the part of those on board the sailing vessel to take proper precaution to avoid a collision":—Held: the proof of such a plea was entirely on the steamer, who must make out in her defence that it was impracticable for her, in consequence of the state of the weather, to have seen the sailing ship in time to have avoided her; & that the steamer was pursuing her course at a reasonable speed, such weather considered.—THE HANNAH PARK v. THE LENA (1865), Holt, Adm. 61; 14 L. T. 675; 2 Mar. L. C. 345.

When one ship is overtaking another, it would rarely be the duty of the ship that is being overtaken to warn the other by whistling or exhibiting an extra light.

The C. was steered W. by N., & going faster than the L., which was steered W.N.W. I.* put her engines full speed ahead, defts.' steamship C., a faster vessel, was about two miles astern of the M.I. The C. gradually overhauled the M.I. & endeavoured to pass her. Before she had drawn clear a collision took place. Defts. alleged (inter alia), that the M. I., as the overtaken vessel, failed to keep her speed in accordance with Article 21 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea :—Held : the development of speed was not a breach of Article 21 ; the Article did not require the M. I. to diminish her speed or to keep it at a reduced rate ; & the C., for attempting to pass in a narrow reach of the river, was alone to blame.—THE CEDERIC, [1924] P. 215 ; 94 L. J. P. 15 ; 132 L. ## SECT. 4.—LOCAL RULES OF NAVIGATION.

SUB-SECT. 1.—CARDIFF.

6140. Breach of sea regulations—Whether warranted under local rules.]—Where a steamship, in charge of a pilot, bound for Penarth Dock, & carrying the usual docking signal of two bright lights aft, saw, when crossing Cardiff East Flat, the red & masthead lights of a steamship coming down Cardiff Drain, bearing on her starboard bow & distant from three to four cables length ; but the pilot in charge took no steps to get out of the way of the other vessel until a collision was inevitable, because he was of opinion that, as he was bound for dock, he was entitled to hold on :—Held : his vessel was to blame for breach of Article 16 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions, there being no " special circumstances " warranting a departure from the Regulations.—THE ST. AUDRIES (1886), 54 L. T. 278 ; 5 Asp. M. L. C. 552.

6141. —— ——.]—Those on a steamship, after leaving the Roath Dock Basin under the orders of the dockmaster, sighted the masthead & red lights of a tug & the green light of her tow two to three cables off & one to two points on the port bow. The tug & tow were coming up on the east side of Cardiff Drain, which runs about north & south, bound into the East Bute Dock. The steamship & tug both sounded a port-helm signal, but a collision occurred. In a damage action each side charged the other with breaches of the Collision Regulations, 1897 :—Held : the Collision Regulations did not apply to vessels meeting in such circumstances in Cardiff Drain, & the steamship was alone to blame for the collision, as she ought to have waited till the channel was clear before she attempted to cross the incoming traffic.—THE RED CROSS (1907), 97 L. T. 610 ; 10 Asp. M. L. C. 521.

blocked.]—By Rule 19 of the Clyde Navigation Bye-laws: "Every steam vessel, under her own steam, crossing from one side of the river towards the other side shall keep out of the way of vessels navigating up & down the river."

The Bogota, a steamer 415 feet in length, was being towed stern first by a tug out of a graving dock on the Clyde, at a point where the river is barely 500 feet broad, preparatory to proceeding up stream. She had steam in her boilers, but was not using it. When she was two-thirds of her length out of the dock & slanting across & down the river the Bogota sighted, some three-quarters of a mile away, the steamship Alconda coming up the river under her own steam with two tugs attached. The Bogota & her tug gave four short blasts, which were repeated, as a warning that the river was blocked, & continued their manœuvre. The Alconda, however, held on her course, & in attempting to pass between the Bogota's tug & the bank, struck the tug while the latter was still about 100 feet from the bank, with the result that the tug was forced back on the Bogota, & all three vessels were damaged:—Held: the Alconda was solely to blame for the collision, (a) because in the circumstances the Bogota was not contravening Rule 19 of the Clyde Navigation Bye-laws; (b) because, assuming that the Bogota had contravened the rule, the collision was caused by the subsequent & independent fault of the Alconda in holding on her course & attempting to pass the Bogota after she had been warned that the river was blocked.—ANGLO-NEWFOUNDLAND DEVELOPMENT CO. v. PACIFIC STEAM NAVIGATION CO., [1924] A. SUB-SECT. 4.—HUMBER.

6145. Exhibition of lights — Anchor light.]—The R. in charge of a tug was dropping stern foremost up the Humber with the tide, & was eventually brought athwart the tide to go into dock. The R. was exhibiting, in addition to the masthead & side lights, a white light from the main peak showing astern, which had been placed there by order of the pilot who was by compulsion of law in charge of the R. The Rules for the Navigation of the River Humber, made by Order in Council in pursuance of Merchant Shipping Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 32, incorporate the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea. The E. coming down the Humber & the R. came into collision. At the hearing it was admitted that the E. was to blame:—Held: (1) the R. was also to blame, for as the Humber Rules were within Merchant Shipping Act, 1873 (c. 85), s. 17, there had been, by the exhibition of a stern light a breach of a statutory regulation, namely, of Article 2, which it was impossible to say might not have contributed to the collision, & there was no circumstance to make a departure from the regulation necessary; (2) the light having been exhibited by order of the pilot, did not exempt the owner of the R. from liability, as the master should not have permitted an infringement of the Regulations.—THE RIPON (1885), 10 P. 6146. —— —— Height of.]—By Rule 2 of the Humber Rules, a vessel with two masts at anchor in the Humber shall exhibit an after-riding light "double the height of the bow light":—Held: the rule must be taken to mean that the after light shall be at least double the height of the bow light, but that it need not be exactly double the height of such light, & a vessel carrying an after light of a height five feet more than double that of the bow light had not infringed the rule.—THE MAGNETA (1890), 15 P. 6149. Vessel turning after signal given—Right to remain athwart channel.]—A steam vessel which has given the appropriate whistle signal under the Humber Rules to indicate that she is about to turn round in the river, thereby imposing the duty on other vessels of keeping out of her way, is not entitled to put herself athwart the channel & continue to come athwart, but must complete her turn, using no more of the waterway than is reasonably necessary for the purpose.—THE AUSTRALMEAD, [1924] P. 36; 93 L. J. P. 15; 130 L. T. 288; 40 T. L. R. 71; 16 Asp. M. L. C. 247.

SUB-SECT. 5.—MANCHESTER SHIP CANAL.

6150. Whether regulations applicable.]—Semble: the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea do not apply to the Manchester Ship Canal; but, assuming that they do, the second paragraph of Article 16 of those regulations, by which "a steam vessel hearing, apparently forward of her beam, the fog signal of a vessel the position of which is not ascertained, shall, so far as the circumstances of the case admit, stop her engines, . . ." will not be compulsory, for the approaching vessel, of which the fog signal is heard, must be in the canal, & presumably on her right side, so that her position is, in the circumstances, sufficiently ascertained by those in charge of the vessel hearing the whistle, to absolve them from the obligation to "stop her engines," & they can, therefore, continue to navigate their vessel with caution on her own right side, so as to pass the other vessel.—THE HARE, [1904] P. 331; 73 L. a vessel moored alongside one of the lie-bys in a fog shall give any signal to indicate her presence as a warning to other vessels & the rules of good seamanship do not require her to give a signal in the absence of circumstances showing that those on board knew or ought to have known that another vessel was approaching to moor there.—THE CITY OF LIVERPOOL (1912), 29 T. 6156. —— ——.]—In considering whether a breach of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions could possibly have contributed to a collision, the ct. must take into consideration the whole of the evidence, even where there is a conflict, subject to the qualification that the onus of proof lies on those infringing the Regulations; & if upon such evidence the ct. comes to the conclusion that the breach could not possibly have contributed to the collision, the ship committing it is not to be deemed to blame in respect thereof.

The steamship H. at night ran into the barque E. at anchor in the river Mersey. By Order in Council of Jan. 5, 1881, every vessel when at anchor in the river Mersey shall carry two white lights, the after light being carried double the height of the foremost light. The E. exhibited two anchor lights, both of which were about 20 feet above the deck. It was admitted by defts. that they only saw the after light:—Held: the H. was to blame for a bad look out, & the E. to blame for a breach of the regulation, it not being shown that in the circumstances of the case the breach could not have contributed to the collision.—THE HERMOD (1890), 62 L. T. 670; 6 T. L. R. 257; 6 Asp. M. L. C. 509.

6157. —— White light at the mizzen truck—Quarantine light.]—A steamship under way in the Mersey is not entitled to carry a white light at the mizzen truck as a signal for the customs officer, or otherwise than as a quarantine light; & if she carries such a light for the former purpose she is guilty of a breach of the Mersey Navigation Rules, & will be held to blame if the other vessel might have been misled thereby.—THE TALBOT, [1891] P. 184; 64 L. T. 542; 7 Asp. M. L. C. 36.

6159. Warning signal—Vessel turning in river.]—The Mersey Rules, which consist of the International Regulations with some modifications & alterations are deficient in not providing a rule, such as exists in the Thames prescribing the signal to be given by a vessel turning in the river. A mere repetition of the helm signal, indicating that the vessel is under a particular helm, is not a sufficient indication to other vessels that she is turning round under that helm.—THE ADRIATIC (1914), 30 T. L. R. 593; subsequent proceedings, 30 T. L. R. 699.

SUB-SECT. 8.—NEWPORT.

6162. Entering port.]—By Article 13 of Newport Harbour Bye-laws, 1894: every vessel shall, unless prevented by stress of weather, be brought into & taken out of the harbour to the right of mid-channel:—Held: in order to comply with this bye-law, every vessel proceeding inward from sea must keep outside the southernmost of the buoys, marking the channel at the entrance to the River Usk, until she can round in on her proper side between the buoys.

A vessel which does a wrong thing in regard to another must show, if she can, & the whole burden of that lies with her, that the wrong thing did not conduce to the collision (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—THE WINSTANLEY, [1896] P. 297; 65 L. J. P. 121; 75 L. T. 133; 8 Asp. M. L. C. 170, C. A.

SUB-SECT. 10.—SUEZ CANAL.

6164. Vessels passing.]—Although it is the recognised practice in part of the Suez Canal for a south going vessel to tie up in due time to allow a north going vessel to pass, still, in their exercise of this right of way, those in charge of the north going vessel have a relative duty cast upon them to act reasonably, &, therefore, they must reduce speed, & keep their vessel so well in hand as to be able promptly to bring her to a standstill should they find themselves approaching too near whilst the giving way vessel is completing the manœuvre of making fast. These precautions are especially necessary at night owing to the difficulty of accurately estimating the distance of the lights of the south going vessel before she exhibits the particular lights prescribed by the rules as an indication that the north going vessel may safely pass.—THE CLAN CUMMING, [1907] P. 311; 77 L. J. P. 1; 97 L. T. 14; 10 Asp. M. L. C. 436, C. A.

6165. Employment of pilot—Liability of master unaffected.]—Where a collision in the Suez Canal has been caused by the negligence of a Suez Canal co.'s pilot compulsorily taken on board the wrongdoing ship, the owner of such ship is not exempt from liability for the damage arising out of the collision.

The effect of the Regulations for the Navigation of the Suez Canal is to constitute a pilot taken on board a ship traversing the canal the adviser of the master, & to leave the control of the navigation

SUB-SECT. 11.—TEES.

6166. Within what limits rules apply.]—(1) To judge of the degree of a ship's culpability under Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 1 (1), regard must be had to the relative positions of the two vessels, the view which each had of the other, the signals which passed between them, & the opportunity each had of avoiding the consequences of the other's errors.

(2) Faults in navigation which do not contribute to the collision are not to be taken into consideration.

(3) Where the evidence does not establish that a clear preponderance of culpability rests upon one ship, the division of damages should be half & half.

(4) The word "river" in Tees Conservancy Bye-laws does not include the buoyed channel outside the river mouth, & there is no analogy between this buoyed channel & certain waterways which have been declared to be narrow channels.

(5) Qu.: as to the duty of vessel approaching at a considerable distance to blow whistle signals, & the effect of the omission to do so having regard to Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 1 (1). —THE PETER BENOIT (1915), 85 L. 6167. Vessels to keep to starboard side of river—Rule strictly observed.]—Articles 17 & 18 of the River Tees Conservancy Bye-laws, providing that ships shall keep "the starboard side of the river so that the port helm may always be applied," & that a "steamship, when approaching another ship on an opposite course or from an opposite direction, shall before approaching within 30 yards slacken her speed, & keep as near as possible to the starboard side of the river," are to be observed even when vessels are approaching one another so as to show each other their green lights, & nothing will excuse the non-observance of these rules but extreme necessity.—THE MARY LOHDEN (1887), 58 L. T. 461; 6 Asp. M. L. C. 262, C. A.

6168. Maximum speed—Standard of measurement.]—In Rule 22 of the Rules for the Navigation of the River Tees, providing that "no steamship shall at any time be navigated in any part of the river at a higher rate of speed than a maximum speed of 6 miles an hour," the speed mentioned is speed over the ground & not through the water.—THE R. Annotation:—Refd. The Philadelphian, [1900] P. 43.

6169. Low speed in fog.]—Although Rule 27 of the Tees Bye-laws provides that "whenever the is a fog no steam vessel shall be navigated in any part of the river at a higher rate of speed than 3 statute miles per hour over the ground," the larger type of vessels which now call at Middlesbrough may find a difficulty in obeying the rule at certain states of the tide, &, having regard to the duty to other vessels to keep steerage way, if a vessel has a right to be under any way at all & her speed is not greater than is right under the circumstances, the ct. may consider that the vessel is not to blame for the non-observance of the rule. —THE DETTINGEN (1914), 30 T. L. R. 589.

SUB-SECT. 12.—THAMES.

A. Passing Points in River.

6170. What is a "point."]—(1) The word "point" in Thames Rules No. 23 means the part of a promontory or headland from the place where a vessel begins to use her steering power to round the promontory or headland to the place where she ceases so to do.

(2) The words "before rounding" are applicable to a vessel not only in the reach before she begins to use her steering powers but also during the time when her steering powers are being so used in order to get round the point.—THE MARGARET (1884), 9 P. D. 47; 53 L. J. P. 17; 50 L. T. 447; 32 W. R. 564; 5 Asp. M. L. C. 204, C. A.; on appeal, sub nom. CAYZER v. CARRON CO., 9 App. Cas. 873, H. L.

6171. What is rounding.]—THE MARGARET, No. 6170, ante.

6172. Behaviour of vessels with & against tide.]—(1) A steamship navigating the Thames against the tide is always bound to obey Thames Conservancy Rules, 1880, r. 23, & on approaching one of the points there named to wait until vessels then approaching it with the tide have passed her. Whether vessels are also to observe R. 22 & pass port side to port side, depends upon whether the vessel navigating against the tide is close to the shore when waiting for the one coming down with the tide to pass her, or so far out as to allow the latter to pass port side to port side.

(2) The expression "passed clear" in r. 23 means "passed clear of the waiting ship."

(3) Semble: where the point to be passed is on the north side of the river, with a flood tide, or on the south side with an ebb tide, if the vessel navigating with the tide has her green light open when ahead of the vessel waiting, r. 23 alone applies, & the vessels will pass clear starboard side to starboard side; otherwise both rules apply.

(4) Steamships rounding a point in the river Thames are not bound to stop or reverse because at one moment they are approaching a vessel coming in the opposite direction where there is no risk of collision if both vessels continue the curvilinear courses they are then on.

(5) Rules issued as these are should be construed literally if they can be construed at all (JESSEL, M.R.).—THE LIBRA (1881), 6 P. D. 139; 45 L. T. 161; 4 Asp. M. L. C. 439, C. A.

breach of Article 47, she had brought herself into a position in which she placed defts.' vessel in a difficulty, & threw upon those in charge of that vessel the obligation of exercising more than ordinary care.—THE OVINGDEAN GRANGE, [1902] P. 208; 71 L. 6174. ——.]—By r. 36 of the Port of London River Bye-Laws, 1914, "every steam vessel navigating against the tide shall on approaching points or sharp bends in the river ease her speed & if necessary stop & wait before rounding so as to allow any vessel navigating with the tide to round & pass clear of her":—Held: the rule imposed two duties on the vessel navigating against the tide; (a) to ease her speed, & (b) if necessary, to stop & wait; but the words "if necessary" meant "if necessary to avoid risk of collision" & not "if necessary in order to allow the vessel navigating with the tide to round & pass clear"; & a vessel going down the river against the tide which eased her speed on approaching Blackwall Point was not to blame for not then stopping, as there was nothing at that time to make it dangerous or risky for her to pass the point at the same time as an upcoming vessel with which, owing to the negligent navigation of two other vessels, she afterwards came into collision.—THE BACKWORTH, [1927] P. 256; 96 L. J. P. 172; 137 L. T. 653; 43 T. L. R. 644.

6175. —— Rule not confined to steam vessels.]—Article 47 of the Thames bye-laws is not confined to the case of steam vessels meeting steam vessels rounding the points mentioned in the article. It applies to the case of a steam vessel meeting a sailing vessel.—THE URSULA FISCHER (1913), 29 T. L. R. 529.

6176. —— Meaning of "tide."]—By r. 36 of the Port of London River Bye-Laws: "Every steam vessel navigating against the tide shall on approaching points or sharp bends in the river ease her speed & if necessary stop & wait before rounding so as to allow any vessel navigating with the tide to round & pass clear of her":—Held: the expressions "navigating against the tide" & "navigating with the tide" refer to an actual tidal stream, operating at the time & place sufficiently to differentiate for the purposes of practical navigation between with it & against it & not merely to the state of the tide, i.e., ebb or flow, according to the published anticipations of the local time tables.—S.S. B. Vessels Approaching with Risk of Collision.

6177. What is "risk of collision."]—Two steam vessels were meeting in the Thames in broad daylight, the tide at the time being flood. The vessel coming up the river was under a starboard helm to round Cuckold Point, & was a little to the southward of mid-channel, when those on board her saw the other vessel with her starboard side open to them about 400 yards off & half a point on their starboard bow. The vessel coming up the river sounded two short blasts on her whistle, to which the other vessel replied with one, & ported her helm, whereupon the engines of the vessel coming up were reversed, &, although the engines of the vessel coming down were also reversed, a collision took place, the vessels meeting nearly end on:—Held: the vessel coming down was solely to blame for the collision, as she was not justified in porting, for if she had kept her course they would have passed clear, starboard side to starboard side, & they were not, when they first saw each other, approaching "so as to involve risk of collision," & Article 46 of the Thames Byelaws, 1898, did not apply.—GUILDHALL (OWNERS) v. GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD., [1908] A. 6181. Vessel sailing down river—Duty to keep south side.]—Pltfs.' & defts.' steamships, proceeding down the river Thames, came into collision, in the upper part of Galleon's Reach, owing in part to defts.' vessel, which was leading, & which was to the Southward of mid-channel, attempting, by starboarding, to pass to the Northward of a dredger, moored in about midstream, thereby tending to throw herself across the course of pltfs.' vessel, which was coming down on the north side of the river, & also making to pass on the north side of the dredger. Both vessels were found to blame, defts.' vessel, as the overtaken vessel, for not keeping her course, & pltfs.' vessel, as the overtaking vessel, for not stopping so as to keep out of the way of defts.' vessel when she saw what that vessel was doing. As a matter of seamanship also both vessels were to be deemed in fault for disregarding the understanding on the river, by which, for the safety of navigation, steamships going down keep to the southward of mid-stream, thereby leaving the northern side of the river free for vessels coming up.—THE GERE, [1909] P. 287; 78 L. Where a vessel, intending either to moor at one of the buoys or anchor in the anchorage ground in Gravesend Reach, finds all the buoys occupied, &, on passing the last buoy, gets her anchor a-cockbill for the purpose of bringing herself to anchor on finding a suitable place, &, after she has got a short distance above the buoys, a collision occurs & damage is done by the anchor, such anchor is only a-cockbill during such time as is "absolutely necessary" for bringing her to anchor within the meaning of Article 19 of the Rules & Bye-laws for the Navigation of the River Thames, 1872.—THE CITY OF DELHI (1887), 58 L. In an action of damage for a collision which occurred in the River Thames, it appeared that the anchor of pltfs.' vessel was one of the parts which first came in contact with defts.' vessel. It was hanging from the hawse, shackle, or ring, awash, & defts. by their counterclaim charged pltfs. with neglecting to comply with the rule:—Held: the rule had not been infringed, as the anchor must be as low as stock awash, but may be as much lower as is thought proper.—THE J. F. Ships Turning Round.

6203. 6205. ——.]—Those in charge of defts.' steam vessel, being about to bring up in Gravesend Reach, gave the four short blasts of the steam whistle required by Rule 23 of the Port of London Bye-laws, 1914, to signify that they were about to turn the vessel round, & followed this with one short blast to indicate that they were turning the vessel with her head to starboard. These signals were repeated for the information of an approaching vessel, pltfs.' steamship, which was overtaking them; but on putting the engines astern in the course of the turning movement the pilot in charge of defts.' vessel did not give three short blasts under Rule 27. In an action of damage by collision:—Held: (1) both vessels to blame in different proportions for bad look out & other defects in their navigation; (2) the omission on the part of the pilot of defts.' vessel to give the three-blast signal, when putting the engines full speed astern, was the primary cause of the collision, as if that signal had been given, those in charge of pltfs.' vessel would have had notice, particularly valuable at night, that the other vessel was moving bodily astern to the extent, in this case, of a length & a half.—THE ANCONA, [1915] P. 200; 84 L. J. P. 183.

H. Sailing Vessels.

6211. Duty to keep out of steamer's way—After four blasts.]—(1) Where a steamship navigating the river Thames is in such a position, through no fault of those in charge of her, that it is unsafe or impracticable for her to keep out of the way of a sailing vessel, it is the duty of the sailing vessel under Article 21 of the Rules & Bye-laws for the Navigation of the River Thames, on hearing the steamer's whistle sounded as therein provided, to keep out of the way of the steamer.

(2) Qu.: is a sailing vessel, on hearing such a signal, bound to keep out of the way of a steamer without knowing that it is in fact unsafe or impracticable for the steamer to keep out of her way?—THE LONGNEWTON (1888), 59 L. T. 260; 6 Asp. M. L. C. 302.

6212. Going about close to shore—Duty of steamers to avoid—Without warning.]—Where a sailing vessel is beating up the river Thames on a flood tide against the wind, & has gone over towards the south shore to the edge of the tide, & as near to that shore as she can safely go, so as to avoid collision with vessels at anchor on the south side of the river, she is entitled to go about without warning vessels of her intention, & a steamer coming up astern of her ought to know from her position & the state of her sails that she is going about, & is bound to take measures, by stopping or otherwise, to avoid a collision.—THE PALATINE (1872), 27 L. T. 631; 1 Asp. M. L. C. 468.

SUB-SECT. 13.—TRENT.

6213. Right of "steamers" to navigate.]—Under Trent Navigation Act, 1858 (c. xxxiv), it is provided that the comrs. thereunder shall maintain the navigation of the river so as to enable vessels usually navigating thereon to carry a burthen of 40 tons at the least, & shall maintain the hauling paths & ways by the side of the river for hauling, towing, or drawing by men or with horses vessels using the navigation, etc.:—Held: although previous to the passing of Trent Navigation Act, 1858 (c. xxxiv), steam tugs were not in use upon the river, yet the term "vessels" includes "steamers," & the use of them upon the Trent is lawful.—MARTIN v. LEAVERS (1882), 46 J. P. 807, D. C.

SUB-SECT. 14.—TYNE.

6214. Vessels crossing river.] — The duty imposed by Article 22 of the Rules for the Navigation of the River Tyne upon vessels crossing the river not to cause obstruction, injury, or damage to other vessels, does not require them in any event to get out of the way of vessels going up or down, & they are at liberty when crossing at a proper time & in a proper manner to do so at such times as may be convenient to themselves, & vessels proceeding up & down must take the ordinary precautions to avoid collision with crossing vessels.—THE THETFORD (1887), 57 L. T. 455; 6 Asp. M. L. C. 179.

Annotation:—Reid. The Skipsea, [1905] P. 32.

6215. —— Warning signals.]—The meaning of Articles 21 & 22 of the Tyne Bye-laws, 1884, is that a vessel crossing the river may cross if there is time & opportunity to do so without hampering another vessel, & the vessel which sees a vessel about to cross must act reasonably & give her a little more room if she requires it, but the burden of the operation at the beginning is upon the vessel crossing.

A steamship, V., coming out of dock, was moving slowly out of the lock entrance on the north side of the Tyne to cross & go down the river, when another steamship, S., came in sight on the port bow about 400 yards off, coming up the river on the other side with a tug ahead of her. The V. continued to go ahead, & gave two short blasts & hard a-starboarded, but shortly afterwards stopped her engines; the S. gave one short blast & ported slightly & reversed her engines for a time, & after other manœuvres the vessels collided:—Held: the vessels were at first in such a position that it was the duty of the V. to elect to cross ahead of the other vessel or to wait till she had passed, & to indicate in an unmistakable way what her action was to be, & she had not done so, & this had caused the collision; & if she had meant to wait she ought to have blown three blasts at once & reversed her engines & remained near the lock entrance, & the V. was alone to blame.—THE SKIPSEA, [1905] P. 32; 74 L. J. P. 34; 93 L. T. 181; 53 W. R. 538; 10 Asp. M. L. C. 91.

6216. ——.]—By the bye-laws in force regulating the navigation of the river Tyne, clause 17, all vessels proceeding to sea must keep to the south side of mid-channel &, clause 20, "vessels crossing the river, & vessels turning take upon themselves the responsibility of doing so safely with reference to the passing traffic"; under these bye-laws a vessel outward bound coming at full speed out of the Tyne Dock, on the south side of the river Tyne, & crossing the river to the north side whether intentionally, in violation of clause 17, or unintentionally by reason of the force of the tide, is bound to use the utmost caution to avoid the passing traffic, & to contemplate before attempting to come out any contingencies, such as tide, stoppage of the traffic, etc., which may arise, & she should only cross if it can be done without risk to that traffic; if a collision occurs by want of such caution the ship will be responsible.

Semble: clause 21 of the above bye-laws, providing that "when steam vessels are proceeding in the same direction but with unequal speed, the vessel which steams slowest shall when overtaken" take certain measures to allow the overtaking steamship to pass her, applies only to a vessel overtaking & passing another actually upon the same course with itself.—THE HENRY MORTON (1874), 31 L. T. 859; 2 Asp. M. L. C. 466, P. C.

Sect. 4.—Local rules of navigation: Sub-sect. 14. Sect. 5: Sub-sect. 1, A., B., C. & D. (a) & (b).]

6217. Ships of unequal speed—Proceeding in same direction—On same course.]—THE HENRY MORTON, No. 6216, ante.

6218. Preparation for entry to port—When course should be set.]—A vessel entering the Tyne is bound, under Bye-law 20 for the Regulation of the River Tyne, directing that vessels shall be brought into port to the north of mid-channel, to get on to a course to enable her to enter on the north side when at some considerable distance outside the pier heads; & if she crosses from south to north of mid-channel when close up to the pier heads, she thereby infringes the bye-law.—THE HARVEST (1886), 11 P. D. 90; 55 L. T. 202; 6 Asp. M. L. C. 5, C. A.

6219. ——— Convenience of outgoing vessel.]—A collision occurred, in the daytime, about on the line of lights a quarter of a mile outside the pier heads at the entrance to the river Tyne, between pltf.'s steamship going out & defts.' steamship coming in. The judge held pltfs.' steamship alone to blame for bad look out, but that, having regard to the place of collision, defts.' steamship had, by coming up from the southward too close to the pier heads infringed Bye-law 20 of the Regulations of the River Tyne, 1884:—Held: defts.' steamship had not broken the rule, as it was not a question of actual distance, but whether the incoming vessel gave the other room to pass out in such a way as not to cause danger, & defts.' steamship had left pltf.'s steamship sufficient room to go out & pass to the southward, provided the outgoing vessel had seen the incoming vessel over the pier, & acted as soon as possible.—THE JOHN O'SCOTT, [1897] P. 64; 66 L. J. P. 47; 76 L. T. 222; 8 Asp. M. L. C. 235, C. A.

6220. Duties in fog.]—The River Tyne Bye-laws provide in great detail for vessels navigating on their proper side of the channel; for fog signals; & for speed in fog:—Held: as the Bye-laws dealt with the whole scope of the duties of vessels in fog, the sea regulations did not apply; & a vessel which was proceeding "at a very moderate speed," as required by Bye-law 39, was not to blame for not stopping her engines, as required by Article 16 of the Sea Regulations, on hearing, forward of her beam, the fog whistle of an approaching vessel, the position of which was not ascertained.—THE CEYLON, [1920] P. 187; 89 L. J. P. 173; 123 L. T. 681; 36 T. L. R. 419; 15 Asp. M. L. C. 100.

6221. Fog signal—Duty of anchored ship to sound.]—The steam tug T. was lying in the river Tyne moored at a pontoon connected with the bank by a bridge when she was run into by the steam trawler R.

The pontoon & bridge were the property of the Tyne General Ferry co. The pontoon, the bridge, & the R. were all damaged by the collision.

The owners of the pontoon & bridge sued the owners of the T. for the damage they had sustained, & the owners of the T. sued the owners of the R. for the damages sustained by the T. The owners of the R. then agreed with the Tyne Ferry co. that if the Ferry co. would bring an action against the T. for the damage sustained by the Ferry co. they would indemnify the Ferry co. against the costs of the action, & make good the difference between the sum recovered & the total amount of the damage sustained & if the action proved unsuccessful would pay them the amount of their damage.

The two actions were heard together. The owners of the R. charged the T. with not sounding her bell when anchored in the fog:—Held: (1) the action by the Ferry co. against the T. should be dismissed for the damage to the pier & pontoon were not caused by the T. being at the pontoon; (2) the R. was liable for the damage for being improperly under way & for excessive speed, & the T. was not to blame for not sounding the bell in accordance with Article 18 (c) of the Tyne Bye-laws, 1884, as she was not at anchor.—THE TITAN, THE RAMBLER (1906), 96 L. T. 93; 10 Asp. M. L. C. 350.

6252. Subsequent loss of ship—Failure to repair after collision.]—Pltfs.' steamship was so badly damaged in a collision in the English Channel with defts.' vessel that she had to put into Portland, where she was temporarily repaired, & she then proceeded to complete her voyage to Bristol in order to deliver her cargo & earn the freight; but she sank off the Lizard. In an action of damage by collision pltfs. claimed to recover as for a total loss:—Held: though the collision was due to the negligence of those in charge of defts.' vessel, & therefore her owners were liable for the damage sustained by pltfs.' steamship, they were not liable for her subsequent loss, as that was not the natural & reasonable result of the wrongful act of defts.' servants, but was due to the insufficient measures taken by pltfs. to repair their vessel in the port of refuge, by reason of which she could not be safely navigated to her port of discharge.—THE BRUXELLESVILLE, [1908] P. 312; 77 L. By pure negligence the watchman so navigated resps.' trawler as to cause a collision with applts.' trawler. Instead of examining the damage done to applts.' trawler, as in duty bound, he entirely neglected his duty & consequently applts.' trawler sank in the dock:—Held: though resps. were liable for the damage caused by the collision they were not liable for the foundering of applts.' vessel, it having been proved that the vessel need not have sunk if the watchman had examined applts.' trawler immediately.—GRANT v. EGYPTIAN (OWNERS), THE EGYPTIAN, [1910] A. A. Degree of Care Required.

(a) In General.

6258. (b) In Sudden Difficulty.

6267. Allowance made for difficult circumstances —General rule.]—It is wrong to port the helm when a collision is apprehended & the other ship is on the starboard bow. But where one ship had by wrong manœuvres placed another ship in a position of extreme danger, that other ship will not be held to blame if she has done something wrong, & has not been manœuvred with perfect skill & presence of mind.

The captains of ships are bound to show such skill as persons of their position with ordinary nerve ought to show under the circumstances. But any ct. ought to make the very greatest allowance for a captain or pilot suddenly put into such difficult circumstances; & the ct. ought not, in fairness & justice to him, to require perfect nerve & presence of mind, enabling him to do the best thing possible (BRETT, L.J.).

It seems to me that that is to propound a most dangerous rule, that if vessels are coming round a point, one under a starboard helm, if she crosses so that her red light is on the port bow of the other, she shall have a right to keep her helm to starboard. It seems to me that the rule that both ships ought to pass port side to port side applies & it would be dangerous to hold the contrary (BRETT, L. J.)

A ship has no right, by its own misconduct, to put another ship into a situation of extreme peril, & then charge that other ship with misconduct (JAMES, L.J.).—THE BYWELL CASTLE (1879), 4 P. D. 219; 41 L. T. 747; 28 W. R. 293; 4 Asp. M. L. C. 207, C. A.

(a) In General.

See, generally, NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXXVI., pp. 100 et seq.

6294. General rule.]—(1) Masters of vessels navigating at night are bound to use all proper precautions for avoiding the chances of a collision. A vessel sailing upon a dark & foggy night with her topmast studding sails set condemned in the damage sued for.

(2) An inevitable accident in point of law is this, viz. that which the party charged with the offence could not possibly prevent by the exercise of ordinary care, caution & maritime skill. If a vessel charged with having occasioned a collision should be sailing at the rate of 8 or 9 miles an hour, when she ought to have proceeded only at the speed of 3 or 4, it will be no valid excuse for the master to aver that he could not prevent the accident at the moment it occurred, if he could have used measures of precaution that would have rendered the accident less probable (DR. LUSHINGTON).

(3) It rarely happens in cases of this description that the ct. can place any safe reliance upon declarations or admissions purporting to have been made, recente facto, by the masters, or the crews of either of the vessels in the cause (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE VIRGIL (1843), 2 Wm. Rob. 201; 2 Notes of Cases, 499; 5 L. T. 122, 524; 7 Jur. 1174; 166 E. R. 730.

B. Burden of Proof.

(a) In General.

6340. General rule—Onus on party alleging negligence.]—(1) In collision, the owners are only entitled to indemnification if the damage is occasioned by the fault or misconduct of the vessel charged as the wrongdoer; therefore, the collision having arisen from the neglect of the vessel damaged, the owners of the other vessel dismissed with costs.

(2) The law will support a claim for indemnification on the part of the owners of a vessel, provided it can be shown that the loss was owing to the fault or misconduct of the vessel charged as the wrongdoer (SIR CHRISTOPHER ROBINSON).

(3) The law requires that there should be preponderating evidence to fix the loss on the party charged, before the ct. can adjudge him to make compensation; & in this case the complainant has not sufficiently sustained the burthen of proof imposed upon him (SIR CHRISTOPHER ROBINSON).—THE LIGO (1831), 2 Hag. Adm. 356; 166 E. R. 273.

6329 i. What must be proved.]—To support a plea of inevitable accident the party pleading it must show, before he can derive any benefit from it, that the damage was caused immediately by the irresistible force of the wind & waves; that it was not preceded by any fault, act or omission on his part as the principal or indirect cause, & that no effort to counteract the influence of the force was wanting.—Re THE AGAMEMNON (1876), 1 Q. L. R. 333.—CAN.

6329 ii. ——.]—In order to support a defence of "inevitable accident" for injury done by one vessel to another it must be shown that the accident could not have been prevented by the exercise of ordinary skill & prudence in the management of the vessel doing the damage.—THE JESSIE MAC v. THE SEALION, [1921] 1 W. W. R. 873.—CAN.

6329 iii. ——.]—In a case of collision, in order to succeed under a plea of "inevitable accident" it must be shown that the accident would not possibly have been prevented by the exercise of ordinary care, caution & maritime skill; it must show what was the cause of the accident, & that the result of that cause was inevitable, or must show all the possible causes one or other of which produced the collision & must further show with regard to every one of these possible causes, that the result could not have been avoided.—POPLAR BAY S.S. CO. v. THE CHARLES DICK, [1926] Exch. C. R. 46.—CAN.

6329 iv. ——.]—A deft., in order to support a defence of inevitable accident, is bound to show that everything was done which could & ought to have been done to avoid a collision.—THE SECRET (1872), 26 L. T. 670.—IR.

6340 i. General rule—Onus on party alleging negligence.]—Where a collision had occurred between two vessels in the Lachine canal, as alleged by pltf., through the gross negligence & malice of those in charge of deft.'s steamer, & deft. pleaded that the collision was the result of pure accident:—Held: as pltf. had failed to establish the allegations of his declaration, & as his barge was at the time of the collision in a position which was in violation of the rules & regulations of the canal, that the action would be dismissed with costs.—LEGER v. JACKSON (1859), 3 L. C. J. 225.—CAN.

6345. —— ——.]—When a collision occurs between a dumb barge without lights & a steamer on a dark night in the river Thames, there is no presumption of law that the steamer is to blame. It is in all cases necessary for those who allege negligence, causing a collision, on the party of another vessel, to prove it.—THE SWALLOW (1877), 36 L. T. 231; 3 Asp. M. L. C. 371, C. A.

6346. —— ——.]—In an action of damage by collision, pltfs., by their statement of claim, alleged that they had suffered damage by reason of a collision between their vessel & defts.' vessel solely caused by the negligent navigation of the latter, & they charged defts. with specific acts of negligence & with breaches of certain articles of the regulations for preventing collisions at sea. Defts., by their defence, denied that the collision & damage were so caused, & alleged that they were solely due to the negligent navigation of pltfs.' vessel, &, after charging pltfs. with specific acts of negligence & breaches of certain articles of the same regulations, defts. counterclaimed for the damage they had suffered by reason of the collision. By their reply, pltfs., as to the defence, joined issue, &, as to the counterclaim, denied the allegations therein contained. Subsequently defts., by letter, admitted that the collision was contributed to by fault on the part of those in charge of their vessel:—Held: on the pleadings as they stood, even coupled with defts.' admission of contributory negligence, it was for pltfs. to begin, as the burden of proof was upon them to show affirmatively that defts.' vessel was solely to blame.—THE CADEBY, [1909] P. 257; 78 L. J. P. 85; 101 L. T. 48; 25 T. L. R. 630; 11 Asp. M. L. C. 285.

6352. To show breach in chain of causation—Sufficiency of discharge of burden.]—As the result of a collision between applts.' steamship M. & resps.' steamship B. V. in the river Clyde the latter vessel was so seriously damaged that it was resolved to beach her on the north side of the river in what was described as position 1. She subsequently slipped off the bank, & drifted to position 2 along the fairway of the river, where she was made fast by moorings under the supervision of the Clyde Navigation Authorities. As the result of the action of the tide she slipped into position 3 across the fairway, which increased the difficulty & cost of salvage. The owners of the M., whilst admitting initial liability for the collision & for damage truly consequent thereon, alleged that the damages claimed were to a large extent due to the subsequent negligence on the part of resps. or of those for whom they were responsible:—Held: there was no breach in the chain of causation initiated by the collision, & no novus actus interveniens which was the direct cause of the final damage. The burden of showing that the chain of causation started by the initial injury had been broken lay on applts. In order to discharge that burden they must prove that the breach in the chain was due to unwarrantable action, & not merely to action on an erroneous opinion by people who had bonâ fide made a mistake while trying to do their best, which was all that was known to have happened in the present case, not only as regards position 1, but also as regards the subsequent positions described as 2 & 3 respectively.—CANADIAN PACIFIC RY. l. Reliability of evidence.]—In cases of collision more credit is to be attached to the evidence of the crew of the ship which is on the alert, than owners of a steam vessel charged those on board pltfs.' steam vessel, & her tug, with, inter alia, failing to sound their whistles for fog in accordance with the regulations for preventing collisions at sea:—Held: though the tug was attached, by a short scope of rope, to pltfs.' steam vessel, she was not, either in law or in fact, towing, as the time had not yet arrived for her to take the vessel in tow, &, therefore, in the circumstances, she was not bound either to give the sound signals in fog for a separate vessel having way upon her, prescribed by Article 15 (a), or the signals for a vessel towing, prescribed by sub-sect. (e) of the same Article, & those in charge of pltfs.' vessel were justified, in the interests of safe navigation, in themselves giving the appropriate signals for a vessel under way.

(2) In the result, as both pltfs.' & defts.' vessels were found to blame for excessive speed, & defts.' vessel in addition for bad look out, & for not stopping in accordance with the rules, the decree of fault was apportioned as one-third to two-thirds, with no costs on either side.

This ct. seldom gets much assistance from the consideration of the angle of the blow, because it often happens that very experienced men on the one side say the angle was a small one, & very experienced men on the other side persuade themselves that in that particular case the angle was a broader one (EVANS, P.).

(4) If a vessel is proceeding at a speed which would not allow her to pull up in something like her own length . . . & if a vessel could proceed & have steerage way at a smaller speed than she was going, she ought to have gone at that speed, & in so far as that speed was exceeded it was excessive (EVANS, P.).—THE SARGASSO, [1912] P. 192; 82 L. 6416. ——.]—It is a rule in cases of collision between a steamer & a sailing ship, that although the latter may have been guilty of misconduct, or may not have observed the general steering & sailing regulations, yet the steamer will be held culpable, if it appears it was in her power to have avoided the collision. Where a steamer is charged with having omitted to do something which ought to have been done, proof of three things is required: First, that it was clearly in the power of the steamer to have done the thing charged to have been omitted; secondly, that if done it would in all probability have prevented the collision; & thirdly, that it was such an act as would have occurred to any officer of competent skill & experience in command of the steamer. In cross suits between a sailing vessel & a steamer, the Ct. of Admlty. held both vessels to blame, & decreed the damages sustained to be equally divided between them. Such decree reversed on appeal, as the case of the sailing vessel setting forth the alleged negligence on the part of the steamer had not been proved.—INMAN v. RECK, THE CITY OF ANTWERP & THE FRIEDRICH (1868), L. closely together & the second act is so mixed up with the state of things brought about by the first act, that the party secondly negligent, while not held free from blame under the Bywell Castle rule, may invoke the prior negligence as being part of the cause of the collision so as to make it a case of contribution.

The V., as leader of a convoy under the charge of two destroyers, the R. & another, the R. being on the starboard hand, had instructions when to alter her course, & was to sound the appropriate held signal on altering. Assuming that that light, & a second white light, belonged to a fishing boat, those in charge of defts.' vessel disregarded them, &, in the ordinary course of navigation, starboarded the helm for the next lightship, thereby bringing about a collision with pltfs.' vessel, which was properly porting to keep out of the way :—Held : apart from other contributing causes, rendering both vessels to blame, the initial cause of the collision was neglect by those in charge of defts.' vessel to comply with the directions contained in the preliminary to Article 17 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, as to "carefully watching the compass bearing of an approaching vessel," for, if this had been done, it would have been ascertained that starboarding would involve risk of collision.—THE PRESIDENT LINCOLN, [1911] P. 248 ; 81 L. Breach by one vessel.] — (1) Bye-laws made by a local authority governing the navigation of a river are to be taken as evidence of what it is the duty of vessels to do in the circumstances named therein, & although the mere breach of one of any of them will not be sufficient reason for holding a ship to blame for a collision, yet, if that breach occasions or contributes to the collision, the existence of the bye-law will afford the best reason for holding the ship violating the bye-law to be guilty of a breach of duty, & consequently to blame for the collision.

(2) Where a bye-law regulating the navigation of a river prescribes the side of the river upon which a ship is to navigate going up or down the river, the observance of this bye-law is doubly necessary during a fog when vessels can only be made out at short distances; & the breach of the bye-law cannot be excused by the plea that it was usual during foggy weather to navigate on the wrong side of the river in order to insure greater safety for the vessel so doing.—THE RAITHWAITE HALL (1874), 30 L. A steamship A., having come up the Thames as far as Bugsby's Reach on the flood tide, was about to turn head down, &, having whistled, her helm was ported & anchor let got so that it might dredge, & she began to swing round. SUB-SECT. 6.—RULE OF DIVISION OF LOSS.

A. Where No Negligence.

6438. Each party bears own loss.]—This is one of those unfortunate cases in which the entire loss of a ship & cargo has been occasioned by two vessels running foul of each other. There are four possibilities under which an accident of this sort may occur. In the first place, it may happen without blame being imputable to either party ; as where the loss is occasioned by a storm, or any other vis major : In that case, the misfortune must be borne by the party on whom it happens to light ; the other not being responsible to him in any degree. Secondly, a misfortune of this kind may arise where both parties are to blame ; where there has been a want of due diligence or of skill on both sides : In such a case, the rule of law is, that the loss must be apportioned between them, as having been occasioned by the fault of both of them : Thirdly, it may happen by the misconduct of the suffering party only ; & then the rule is, that the sufferer must bear his own burthen. Lastly, it may have been the fault of the ship which ran the other down ; & in this case the injured party would be entitled to an entire compensation from the other (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE WOODROP-SIMS (1815), 2 Dods. 83 ; 165 E. R. 1422.

(a) Vessel Causing Damage.

6440. General rule—Right of injured party to full compensation.]—THE WOODROP-SIMS, No. 6438, ante.

6441. —— ——.]—(1) Rule 23 of the Thames Rules is not confined to the seaward side of "a line drawn from Blackwall Point to Bow Creek."

The order of the Ct. of Appeal reversed & the order of Butt, J., restored, on the ground that even assuming, but without deciding, that the construction put by the Ct. of Appeal upon Rule 23 was correct & that the Clan Sinclair had transgressed that rule, yet such transgression was not the cause of the collision : that ordinary care on the part of the Margaret would have enabled her to avoid the collision, & that she alone was to blame.

(2) Where the cause of the accident is the fault of one party & one party only, Admlty. & Common Law both agree in saying that that one party who is to blame shall bear the whole damage of the other (LORD BLACKBURN).

(3) When the cause of the accident is the fault of both, each party being guilty of blame which causes the accident, there is a difference between the rule of Admlty. & the rule of Common Law. The rule of Common Law says, as each occasioned the accident neither shall recover at all, & it shall be just like an inevitable accident ; the loss shall lie where it falls. . . . The rule of the Admlty. is, that if there is blame causing the accident on both sides they are to divide the loss equally (LORD BLACKBURN).

(4) It is necessary to see that the actual transgression has been in fact the cause of the accident to some extent, it does not matter how much, & that is a matter of proof (LORD BLACKBURN).

(5) There was no attempt to say that any authorities show that the rules of the Ct. of Admlty. & the rules of a Ct. of Law as to what amounts to being a fault occasioning the accident differ in the slightest degree. The nature of the thing of course requires that in applying those rules you should look to what the nature of the accident is & to what the neglect is. If it is two ships, they are to be governed by the same rules of law & of evidence as if it was two carts in the street ; but when you come to apply that you must remember that a ship is a thing which cannot be stopped in an instant like a cart, & cannot be moved from one side to the other like a cart ; & when you have to look out for miles instead of looking out for yards, the application of the rules becomes very different (LORD BLACKBURN).

(6) I think that a vessel which is proved to have disregarded these precautions [laid down in Rule 23] must accept the onus of showing that the neglect of them did not contribute to any collision or damage which may have occurred at the time or subsequently (LORD WATSON).—CAYZER v. CARRON CO. 6452. Collision between steamer & submerged wreck—Negligence of wreck-marking vessel.]—(1) Pltfs.' claim was for damage sustained by their steamer in collision with a submerged wreck at night in the entrance channel to the Grimsby docks. At the time of the collision the wreck, which had been abandoned to underwriters, was marked by a wreck-marking vessel. The lights exhibited by this vessel were placed & maintained by the wreck-marking authority acting under its statutory powers, but in certain other directions the owners of the wreck continued to maintain a measure of control over her. The owners of the wreck counterclaimed for the damage sustained by the wreck:—Held: there was negligence on the part of those in charge of the steamer in failing to keep clear of the wreck, & in the wreck-marking authority for exhibiting lights in a wrong position upon the wreck-marking vessel.

(2) Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 1, provides: "Where by the fault of two or more vessels damage or loss is caused to one or more of those vessels . . . the liability to make good the damage or loss shall be in proportion to the degree in which each vessel was in fault":—Held: the only negligence of the wreck-marking authority being the showing by their servants on board the wreck-marking vessel of lights in a wrong position, such negligence was not a cause of the collision. The collision was thus solely caused by the fault of pltfs.' vessel.

(3) Both the wreck-marking vessel & the wreck were vessels within Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 1, for the purpose of apportioning blame for the negligence of their owners, & therefore if the negligence of the wreck-marking authority had been a contributory cause of the collision, the rule for apportioning blame under the Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), & not the common law rule of contributory negligence, would have been applicable as between pltfs. & the wreck-marking authority.

(4) The owners of the wreck, having surrendered control of the wreck for the purposes of marking, were in the event entitled to recover on their counterclaim against pltfs.—THE MANORBIER CASTLE (1922), 129 L. T. 31; 16 Asp. M. L. C. 151.

Thus, where a vessel broke from her moorings & was damaged, in circumstances in which it was held that the damage was caused partly by the inefficiency of the moorings & partly by the wash raised by another vessel passing at an excessive speed:—Held: the blame might be apportioned between the two vessels.—THE BATAVIER III. by collision between two steam vessels both were found to blame for navigating in a fog without proper regard to the regulations for preventing collisions at sea; but the initial fault, without which there would probably not have been any collision, arose from the neglect of those in charge of defts.' vessel to obey the rule requiring them to stop their engines on hearing a whistle on their starboard bow :—Held : in applying the provisions as to the division of loss, in cases of collision, contained in Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 1 (1), the justice of the case would be met by directing that defts.' vessel should be liable for 60 per cent. of the damage sustained, leaving pltfs. vessel liable for the remaining 40 per cent., with no order as to costs.—THE ROSALIA, [1912] P. 109; 81 L. 6474. ——.]—A dumb barge in tow of a tug came into collision with a steamship. The cargo on the barge was damaged. The servants of the tug owners controlled the navigation of the barge, & the barge was under hire to the tug owners, who were in the position of owners of the barge.

The tug owners & the cargo owners brought an action against the owners of the steamship to recover the amount of the damage done to the barge & to the cargo on the barge. The owners of the steamship counterclaimed against the tug owners for the damage done to the steamship. The ct. held that the collision was due to the fault of the steamship & the tug, & that the steamship was to blame to the extent of three-fourths & the tug was to blame to the extent of one-fourth. The owners of the cargo claimed to recover the whole of their damage against the owners of the steamship:—Held: as the tug & barge were controlled by the servants of the tug, by whose fault the collision was partly caused, the principle laid down in The Milan, No. 5221, ante, was applicable, & the cargo owners could only recover three-fourths of their damage from the owners of the steamship.—THE UMONA, [1914] P. 141; 83 L. 6475. Effect of exceptions in bill of lading.]—Where a vessel carrying cargo under a bill of lading providing against loss & damage from collision & loss or damage from any act, neglect, or default whatsoever of the pilots, master, mariners, or other servants of the owners in navigating the ship, collides with another vessel belonging to the same owners by reason of the joint negligence of both vessels & the cargo is lost, there is no liability under the contract of carriage, as such loss is covered by the above exceptions, but the owners are liable in tort for the negligence of their servants on board the vessel not carrying the cargo.

Under such circumstances the Admlty. Ct. rule as to the division of damages applies, & the owners' liability is one half the damage, their liability in respect of the carrying ship being covered by the bill of lading.

Pltfs. shipped specie on board defts.' ship, under a bill of lading which contained the following: "Accidents, loss & damage from . . . collision . . . & all the perils, dangers, & accidents of the sea . . . & steam navigation of whatsoever nature & kind soever, & accidents, loss or damage from any act, neglect, or default whatsoever of the pilots, master, mariners, or other servants of the co., in navigating the ship . . . excepted."

Defts. were an English limited co., but their ships were registered in Holland in the name of a Dutch co. composed of the same persons as the deft. co., & carried the Dutch flag. The contract was in English, & made at an English port.

On the voyage the carrying ship came into collision with another ship, also belonging to defts., & was sunk, & pltfs.' specie was lost.

In an action to recover the value of the specie, the jury found that the carrying ship was in some degree to blame, but the other ship was mainly at fault:—Held: (1) the question of the defts.' liability depended on English law, & they were liable independently of contract, for the negligence of their servants on board the ship which came into collision with the carrying ship;

(2) the exceptions in the bill of lading exempted defts. from liability for collision caused by the negligence of their servants on board the carrying ship, but the acts of their servants on board the other ship were not a breach of the contract contained in the bill of lading: (3) as both ships were to blame, the Admlty. rule as to damages applied by Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 25 (9), & therefore the damage occasioned by the collision should be equally between the two ships, &, defts.' liability as owners of one of the ships being excluded by the terms of the bill of lading, they were only liable for half the damage.—CHARTERED MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA v. NETHERLANDS INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD. Ct. rule that in cases of collision the damages are to be equally divided where both ships are to blame, does not apply to actions for breach of contract of carriage brought by owners of cargo against the carrying ship to recover damages for loss of, or injury to, their goods, & hence pltfs. in such actions are entitled to recover their full damages from the owners of the carrying ship.—BURNESS (J.) & SONS v. PERSIAN GULF S.S. 6477. Amount paid for salvage.]—A brig & ship came into collision; both were pronounced to blame, & would, according to general rule, divide the damage. The brig having been abandoned by her master & crew was subsequently towed by another vessel into a port, & there repaired. The owners of the ship contended that the abandonment was unnecessary, & that if so, a sum which had been awarded to this vessel for salvage ought not to be included in the damages:—Held: in cases of collision, the master & crew are not bound to incur any extraordinary risk with a view to preserve the vessel; that when both vessels are to blame, the presumption is, that damage immediately arising is in consequence of such collision; & under the circumstances of the case the abandonment was unnecessary, & the amount paid for salvage is not to be included in the damage.—THE LINDA (1857), Sw. 306; 30 L.
